Farce is one of the most enjoyable and popular theatrical forms. It’s also one of the hardest to do successfully. The alchemy between script, cast and director must be just right. The slamming doors, the pratfalls, the juggling of a trio of beautiful women can easily go awry and fall flat. This production of Boeing-Boeing gets it all right. Last season it was a huge success in London and a smash in New York.

As befitting a French farce, Boeing-Boeing was initially written in the early ’60s in French by playwright Marc Camoletti and became the most produced French play in the world. The English version was translated by Beverley Cross and ran in London for seven years. The first transatlantic journey for the play in 1965 wasn’t a success, lasting only three weeks on Broadway. This production in 2008 was a charm — sold out houses and Tony Awards followed.

And here’s where alchemy comes into play. Under the hand of the gifted English director, Matthew Warchus, renowned for work as diverse as Sam Shepherd’s True West and Alan Ayckbourn’s The Norman Conquests, Boeing-Boeing has been re-imagined. Matthew created an entirely new version that worked for American audiences in a way that the earlier edition had not. Matthew told me he was aided in his re-invention by going back to the original French text and restoring some of what had been eliminated in the original translation. Set in the era when newly begun jet travel was still glamorous, Matthew also gives the show a contemporary energy and allure.

I’m delighted to bring you the regional theatre debut of Boeing-Boeing, a sparkling theatrical event which is being recreated for the Globe by Matthew’s very talented colleague Mark Schneider who assisted him on Broadway. You’re in for a ride like no other. So sit back, fasten your seat belts and be prepared for gale force laughter.

Production Sponsors

The Old Globe is proud to recognize California Bank & Trust as a sponsor of Boeing-Boeing. California Bank & Trust is a longtime supporter of the Globe, providing both volunteer and financial contributions for numerous productions including The First Wives Club, Dancing in the Dark, Hay Fever, The Sisters Rosensweig, The Lady with All the Answers, Dinner with Friends, Julius Caesar and Pericles. Sandra Redman, Senior Vice President and Manager of California Bank & Trust’s Private Banking Division, serves on the Globe’s Executive Committee, chairs the Nominating Committee and is a Co-Chair of the 2010 Globe Gala.

Ed and Gigi Cramer

Ed and Gigi Cramer discovered the magic of The Old Globe after moving to San Diego more than thirty years ago and greatly admire the artistic caliber and variety of productions offered on the Globe stages. During their long association with the Globe, the Cramers have been subscribers, Circle Patrons and now Season Sponsors, and have proudly represented the Globe for several years as Globe Ambassadors. Living in New York while in graduate school, Gigi attended almost every production ever offered on and off Broadway, and together, the couple has enjoyed live theatre for decades. Gigi and Ed agree that live theatre offers an intimacy, authenticity and immediacy that no other performing arts form delivers, and that it must be preserved. Given that the Cramers travel frequently and have two flight attendant daughters, this production of Boeing-Boeing seems the perfect play for them to proudly sponsor!

Continental Airlines

For more than 15 years, Continental Airlines has provided Globe artists nonstop service between San Diego and Continental Airlines’ New York area hub, Newark Liberty International Airport. As one of the world’s largest airlines, Continental serves over 260 destinations with more than 2,400 daily departures throughout the Americas, Europe and Asia. In 2009, Continental was rated the top airline on Fortune magazine’s annual airline industry list of World’s Most Admired Companies, for the sixth consecutive year. Continental is committed to the communities it serves and supports numerous charitable organizations across the country.

Continental Airlines’ previous production support includes underwriting for Six Degrees of Separation, Sea of Tranquility, Restoration Comedy, The Times They Are A-Changin’, Take Me Out, Bus Stop, Stones in His Pockets and Oldest Living Confederate Widow Tells All.
France has pioneered breakthroughs in food, farce and flight. In 1960, Marc Camoletti combined two of them for Boeing-Boeing, a breezy boulevard comedy about a Paris architect juggling the arrivals and departures of his three flight-attendant fiancées. In 1991, the Guinness Book of Records declared it the most-produced French play in the world.

The country that gave us Molière, whose send-ups of pompous blowhards remain among the most-produced farces on either side of the Atlantic, also gave us the men responsible for first hoisting man heavenward.

Brothers Joseph-Michel and Jacques-Étienne Montgolfier designed the hot air balloon that, in November 1783, provided the first manned flight. A test some months earlier, however, might have beaten Camoletti as the breakthrough merging of flight and farce. They drafted a sheep, a rooster and a duck to be passengers, and with a baa-baa here, and a quack-quack there, they remained aloft for eight minutes, covering two miles at a height of 1500 feet, and earning the applause of an audience that included King Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette.

Fast-forward 180 years. Air travel is now advancing at leaps and bounds. The jet age has dawned with the 1960s, and Seattle-based Boeing is helping the world’s airlines ramp up air speed and reduce travel time. Around the time Camoletti conceived of his signature comedy, Pan Am had the maiden commercial flight of a Boeing 707. That flight, from New York to Paris, was 50 percent faster than the latest propeller-driven airliner of the time. People could now live on one side of the Atlantic, weekend on the other, and flirt while in transit between them. They inspired a new term: “the jet set.”

The timeless elements of great farce usually begin with a secret sexual liaison. The more outrageous the secret, the more dangerous the liaison, the more we can depend on it exploding into full view. Invariably, the main character – invariably a “man” character – keeps digging himself into a deepening hole by frantically trying to cover his tracks. Often with the help of a well-intentioned accomplice, a stage with plenty of doors, and the fearlessness of a trapeze artist, he manages to keep the balls in the air – and the audience in stitches – for most of the play.

In Boeing-Boeing, Bernard, the architect, brags to his friend Robert about his organization.

His apartment is a carefully-scheduled international terminal for his American, German and Italian paramours. They arrive for a layover, depart the next day, and innocently pass the next scheduled arrival like ships in the night. On the same weekend Robert arrives, Italian Gabriella announces that, “They’re putting the Super-Caraveli on our route . . . I’ll be able to see you more often.” The next day, American Gloria has similar news that TWA is adding “The Super-Boeing.” “I’ll be here more often and we can spend more time together.”

With the serious increase in cabin pressure, the fun begins.

Boeing-Boeing caught the topical updraft in 1960, and quickly crossed the channel with an English adaptation by Beverley Cross. The London run would continue for years, racking up more than 2,000 performances. Though the 1965 Broadway landing skidded to an end after a few weeks, an American film version, co-written by Camoletti starred Tony Curtis and Jerry Lewis, and was a hit in December of that year. (In 1997, Quentin Tarrantino included it in his first Austin Film Festival of favorite prints he owns.)

An American version of the play, however, would not gain traction until 2008, when Matthew Warchus took another look at it. The Tony Award-winning English director and dramatist had helmed the world premieres of Art and God of Carnage and noteworthy revivals of Follies, True West and most recently The Norman Conquests. As Mark Rylance, who won a Tony for his role as Robert in Warchus’ production, told Playbill, their production was very different from the first one that came to America.

“We found in the London rehearsals that the original French script was heavily adapted in the ‘60s for English audiences,” he said. “There was a lot of better material in it. That English adaptation hadn’t been so confident about the play’s situation comedy-based nature and had added a sense of humor that often obscured what was clearly funny. It hadn’t trusted the situation as much as we found we could. So we went back to the original.”

And that is the version – directed by Mark Schneider, who was associate director for the Broadway smash – that has landed here in Balboa Park.
A FLEET OF FRENCH FARCES

Boeing-Boeing was one of a half-dozen mid-century theatrical imports.

Jerry Lewis and Tony Curtis starred in the 1965 film version of Boeing-Boeing.
Marc Camoletti’s Boeing-Boeing arrived in America near the beginning of a wave of farcical French imports that started in the late 1950s. For more than a decade, plays launched in the shadow of the Eiffel Tower landed at regular intervals around Times Square.

The first, Marcel Achard’s A Shot in the Dark, adapted by Harry Kurnitz and directed by Harold Clurman, ran more than 300 performances during the 1961-62 Broadway season. The cast included Julie Harris and Walter Matthau, two actors who would appear more than once in these comedies.

By the end of 1962, Boeing-Boeing was an established hit in Europe, having premiered in Paris in 1960 and then, in a translation by Beverley Cross, arriving in London in ’62. Something didn’t translate for Broadway audiences back then, and when it arrived in America in 1965, it mysteriously foundered.

Next to arrive was Pierre Barillet and Jean-Pierre Grédy’s 1964 comedy Fleur de Cactus. Abe Burrows, who became the major player in this conversion process, adapted Fleur into Cactus Flower and directed its successful Broadway run. Lauren Bacall played the late bloomer referenced by the title. This was only Bacall’s second venture back into theatre after returning to New York following the 1957 death of her husband, Humphrey Bogart. It established her as a Broadway star, and earned her two more Tony Award-nominated roles in Applause and Woman of the Year. I.A.L. Diamond would adapt it for a film starring Matthau, Goldie Hawn (in her Oscar-winning big screen debut) and Ingrid Bergman in the Bacall role.

By December 1968, another Barillet and Grédy comedy, Forty Carats, was ready to land. Adapted by Jay Presson Allen and directed by Burrows, it starred Harris in a Tony Award-winning performance as the winter end of a May-December romance. It would run nearly two years and earn praise for Burrows including Life Magazine’s suggestion that, given his ability to bring French culture to America, he “should be our next ambassador to France.”

Unlike the film versions of A Shot in the Dark and Cactus Flower, and despite Liv Ullman and Gene Kelly in the cast, Allen’s screen adaptation of Forty Carats was a flop.

By the time Four on a Garden, itself a series of four one-acts, arrived in winter 1970-71, the phenomenon was running on fumes. Carol Channing and Sid Caesar were not enough to keep this Barillet-Grédy-Burrows concoction up and running, and after 47 previews and 57 regular performances, it shuddered to a halt.

In the early ’80s, Allen would take one last shot adapting Potiche, yet another Barillet and Grédy comedy, into A Little Family Business. It premiered here in California with Angela Lansbury in the lead role. In November 1982, the play went straight from the Ahmanson Theatre to the Martin Beck. But A Little Family Business did little box office business, opening for just 20 performances.

It was not until 2008 that these Franco-American hybrids would take off again with two hit productions – both of them Camoletti comedies. Don’t Dress for Dinner, produced by the Chicago-based British Stage Company, was hailed by the Tribune’s Chris Jones as a “terrific new commercial production” of a “cheerfully retro, happily un-PC attraction.” Among the stars was Globe Associate Artist Mark Harelik.

The other was Matthew Warchus’ re-working of Boeing-Boeing, which earned the 2008 Tony Award for Best Revival. With The Old Globe production beginning what will surely be many regional productions, one might say the French are helping American theatres balance their budgets. Unfortunately, the balance of trade between the two countries is a different story. In 2007, the U.S. imported $24 billion dollars more in French goods. And, leading the list was a French import that would have inspired a sequel farce by Mr. Camoletti: civilian aircraft engines.

Wikipedia has a list of 36 occurrences of “Flight Attendants in Pop-Culture.” The first is Marc Camoletti’s Boeing-Boeing.

In the 1960s, when a stewardess appeared in a play or film, it was shorthand for a single, attractive woman with even odds to be spending the night in a hotel. Even Stephen Sondheim, in his breakout 1970 musical, Company, gave Bobby-baby a stewardess girlfriend. As Joanne Gordan observes in “Stephen Sondheim: A Casebook,” the “conquest of a ‘stewardess’ is, for audiences who would remember the era, a depiction of a particularly ’60s kind of fantasy – the suave bachelor seducing a hot ’stew.’”

Two women who spent the era inside a United Airlines stewardess uniform are Globe Guilders Nancy Brock and Randy Tidmore.

Both trained in Chicago and eventually ended their stewardess careers flying out of Los Angeles. Iowan Tidmore flew for United Airlines from 1947 to 1962, but also worked in the office during the last half of those years. She became a supervisor, handling hiring, customer complaints and inquiries from the media. Brock flew for 35 years, many of them between LA and Honolulu, beginning in 1955.

When they started, stewardesses (they still stumble on the term “flight attendant”) had to weigh in, keep their hair short, and remain unmarried.

“They had to be 21 by the time they went on the line,” said Tidmore. “They had to wear hose, and the seams had to be straight, and wear girdles and high heels all the time. They had to be ladies. If any received three complaints from passengers, they were out.”

There was an upside, though. “We used to be celebrities,” Brock said. “We were looked up to. There weren’t very many of us – or many airplanes either. I can remember sitting at the coffee shop in Chicago and having Ed Sullivan, who was sitting at the horseshoe counter, pay for our breakfast. People did that. Women passengers came on with their heels, hats and gloves, and men always wore a suit. The whole atmosphere was first class and we were treated that way, too.”

“You couldn’t be married, but that didn’t mean you couldn’t have an affair with a pilot,” Tidmore smiled. “A lot of my friends were married, but I didn’t know it. One couple – a pilot and stewardess – were married and nobody knew it. They lived in the same apartment building. She lived downstairs and he lived upstairs, with a telephone he could hear from downstairs.”

“Newspapers used to interview me about what stewardesses did,” she continued. “‘Tell us some stories,’ they would say. ‘Are the stewardesses marrying passengers? Are they going out with passengers on every trip?’ Absolutely not! I’d tell them. Our girls don’t do that, you know. And they didn’t. They were not marrying any more than non-flight attendants.”

All that started changing around the time the play is set, with the advances in jets, and unionization.

“When the unions came in, the airline couldn’t say how we wore our hair, or make us wear a girdle or high heels,” said Tidmore.

“That’s true,” agreed Brock.

“Although it was still pretty strict. We were still under weight controls. I was still getting weighed in during the 1970s, long after the unions became involved.”

The public image of flight attendants changed, they feel, to something closer to service personnel than celebrities. But, they both feel the profession is finally getting more respect.

“I think the public does think they are service people,” Brock said. “But I think that, more and more since 9/11 and events like the recent landing in the Hudson River, people realize that in-flight people also have a safety responsibility and we’re there to save lives. The perception has gone back up.”

Both remain active in “Clipped Wings,” a social organization for flight attendants that they co-chaired four years ago. The name recalls the days when, “if you got married, your wings were clipped,” Brock said.

Auditions for 2010 Globe Honors are May 1st

Globe Honors is a thrilling new awards program that recognizes and rewards excellence in High School theatre. Students currently in grades 9 - 12 and who have performed in a play or musical at their schools or at another theatre are eligible to compete in the program. This year’s auditions will take place on May 1 and the finals will be performed on the Globe stage on May 17. Winners receive scholarships and may be eligible to participate in national-level competitions such as the National High School Musical Theatre Awards (NHSMTA) in New York City.

Introducing two new programs for Elementary and Middle School Students

Saturday’s Child is a brand-new Creative Dramatics program for children ages four, five and six. These 90 minute workshops take children from storybook to performance while they learn how to use their voices, bodies and imaginations to bring a story to life. Parents return for the last 20 minutes to watch their children perform a short presentation of the story of the day. Creative Dramatics will take place on Saturdays, April 10 and 24, May 8 and 22 and June 5 and 19. Cost per class is $25.

The Old Globe Middle School Conservatory will begin this summer. Students in grades six, seven and eight will discover new approaches to acting through sessions in voice and speech, movement, stage combat, improvisation and much more. Students will explore all three of The Old Globe’s theatres, meet artists and technicians and learn how a professional theatre operates. Students will perform a showcase for parents and friends in Hattox Hall on the final day of class. The Middle School Conservatory will take place July 26 – 30 and August 2–6 from 10: a.m. to 3:00 p.m. Cost per student is $450.

For more information about the Globe’s education programs, please contact Kim Montelibano Heil at (619) 231.1941 x 2145 or GlobeLearning@TheOldGlobe.org.
The Old Globe’s ability to maintain the highest standard of excellence, while keeping ticket prices affordable, is due in large part to the financial support of more than 2,000 individuals, businesses, foundations and government agencies. Please join us in giving a warm thanks and recognition to these leaders who have made tonight and our 629 other performances possible. The Old Globe appreciates the support of those who have stepped into the spotlight.

As future generations discover and delight in quality theatre at the Globe, they will have you to thank for its ongoing success. Gifts of all sizes are welcome. We can advise you on how to leave a lasting gift to the Globe whether it is a cash contribution, a Charitable Bequest in your Will or Living Trust, a Charitable Remainder Trust, Lead Trusts, Gift Annuities, Life Estates, Pooled Income Funds or a number of other available options.

As we celebrate the Globe’s 75th Anniversary as a local cultural landmark and national icon, it is time to build for the future. Join those listed below who have chosen to support our Theatre forever! You can help secure the future of The Old Globe — for the next 75 years — and beyond!
