Welcome to Arrives
Welcome to Arroyo’s — a New York City neighborhood lounge. And while this may not be a neighborhood that you’re familiar with, it’s certainly a place we hope you enjoy visiting.

Welcome to Arroyo’s is the second production in our Southeastern San Diego Residency Project, which aims to build a deeper connection with our neighbors.

In creating this association, our first effort, in Spring 2009, was Kingdom, which was first performed at The Lincoln High School Center for the Arts and then for a limited run at the Globe. This year we have turned things around and enhanced that experience by making Welcome to Arroyo’s part of our subscription programming, and then moving this production to Lincoln. Between both venues, thousands of Lincoln High School students and students from around the county will experience this show alongside our adult audiences.

Finding socially conscious writers with talent and a unique voice that will reach our community is central to the mission of this residency project, and Kristoffer Diaz is an important new playwright who is achieving great success reaching audiences of all ages and backgrounds. Most recently he was a Pulitzer Prize finalist for The Elaborate Entrance of Chad Deity, which has taken both Chicago and New York by storm. While here in San Diego, Kris, as well as our director Jaime Castañeda, will be working with young people throughout San Diego in workshops and master classes focusing on music, theatre and writing.

We are fortunate to work with these rising talents through the support of The James Irvine Foundation Artistic Innovation Fund with additional support from The Legler Benbough Foundation and The San Diego Foundation. With this enlightened philanthropy, we are able to bring you exciting new work and reach a younger, broader and more diverse audience.

It is my greatest wish that our collective shared experience with this play will, in some way, connect us with each other.

An attentive foreign visitor to New York City in the early 1980s would have been mystified. The word REVS, in bold white spray paint, was emblazoned everywhere, including an abandoned railway track, suggesting someone with Spiderman-like capacity had somehow climbed to death-defying heights and painted his name, not once, but dozens of times along the length of the road.

And he wasn’t alone. If you had walked through the streets of Soho to tour the emerging art gallery scene, you might have noticed another kind of do-it-yourself artform taking hold. In retrospect, it was a breakthrough as original and vibrant as Picasso’s cubist period. At the same time that pop art was being widely accepted in museums, graffiti was literally leaving its mark on cities across America, introducing a completely new visual style. Many of course, didn’t see it as art.

In the early 1970s, the mayor of New York City, John Lindsay, established an anti-graffiti task force. As financial woes reached crisis conditions by the middle of the decade, the presence of graffiti on every available inch of public space seemed an ominous harbinger of lawlessness and urban decay.

It wasn’t just limited to New York, of course. While the city is now widely recognized as the epicenter of graffiti’s creative heyday—a kind of Petri dish in which a new visual vocabulary emerged from the streets – some argue that the impulse to scratch one’s name on a wall dates back to Ancient Rome. The word itself derives from the Italian, graffito, meaning scratched. (Ironic, since the only significant graffiti left on the New York subway system today is scratched into plastic windows.)

Modern graffiti hit its stride in the late 60s, when kids, armed with aerosol paint cans and magic markers, began to see the city around them as a canvas. Teens descended on subway yards in the Bronx under cover of darkness, creating trippy moving murals, while battling police, and sometimes each other. Sometimes tagging was used by gangs as a way of marking territory. The mood in cities across America was one of paranoia, decay, and following the riots in the summer of 1967, bitter racial tension. In this context, graffiti was like a secret language that was shared by a shadowy tribe, a cultural and generational revolt that mixed menace, playfulness, creativity and rebellion. Along with breakdancing and rapping, graffiti was an essential element in the triple threat of a new culture: hip-hop.

By the late ‘60s, kids tagging subways in New York had inspired like-minded youth across the country’s major cities. A lot of people felt that the desecration of public property was nothing more than an insolent middle finger to the establishment. But a few prescient art gallery owners on both coasts saw the evolution of something not only artful, but beautiful.

Stars emerged. In New York, those who had “bombed” subways and public spaces in all five boroughs were said to have gone “all-city,” and that meant they had attained king status (the term began to be used as a verb, as in “kinging.”) Tracy 168, TAKI 183, C.A.T. 87, and CAY 161 are just a few of the names that became ubiquitous across New York.

In 1973, Richard Goldstein wrote a seminal article in New York magazine, called “The Graffiti ‘Hit’ Parade.” It was the first time a mainstream publication gave any serious credence to the possible artistic value of tagging. To law enforcement, it was mere vandalism. But cultural cognoscenti got it. By 1979, when graffiti artist Lee Quiñones and Fab 5 Freddy showed their work at a gallery in Rome, the art form was well on its way to going global. By the turn of the next decade, the film Wild Style (1982), and the PBS documentary “Style Wars” (1983) were spreading the wave of fascination with graffiti far beyond New York’s borders.

Forty-some odd years later, graffiti is now often more prevalent in cities across Europe, South America (especially Brazil) and Asia than it is on the New York City subway system, which long ago adopted a zero tolerance policy (and spent millions of dollars purchasing trains with easily cleanable steel surfaces).

Ironically, as the golden age of graffiti faded, the vibrant and highly original urban calligraphy was co-opted by advertisers, and is now a prevalent image in global marketing and branding. In 2001, computer giant IBM launched an advertising campaign that featured “street artists’” painting words on sidewalks (but the mainstreaming of graffiti hadn’t quite gone far enough: the artists were arrested and charged with vandalism, and IBM was fined more than $120,000 for clean-up costs). In 2005, a similar ad campaign was launched by Sony who, having learned from IBM’s mistakes, paid building owners for the rights to paint on their buildings. Purists don’t consider these marketing efforts graffiti at all, arguing that if permission has been given, it isn’t true to the original art form.

From the chaos and lawlessness of graffiti’s early days, serious artists like Jean-Michel Basquiat and Keith Haring emerged, as did an ongoing dialogue: vandalism or art? Delinquents or geniuses? In recent years, New York transformed itself from an entropic and unnerving kaleidoscope of passion, color, and self-expression to a cleaner, safer, quieter city. It’s now a lot easier to find a Starbucks than a tag spray-painted on a subway car. There’s plenty of great art on museum and gallery walls. But the strange, untamed beauty of seeing a secret language scarred and emblazoned on walls and doors, is gone. It was a sign that something new was stirring. Someone, somewhere, was finding a voice, if only to say, I’m here. I’m alive. I’m me.
In 2008, when the Globe opened The Old Globe Technical Center in southeastern San Diego, the theatre made a commitment to the community to be a good neighbor and partner. In the two years since then, that commitment has been met through the Southeastern Residency Project funded with grants from the Irvine Foundation, Legler Benbough and the San Diego Foundation. There are various components to the Residency Project but three stand out in the context of the core mission of the Globe: producing plays.

First there’s the Tech Center itself. It includes space for the construction of all the Globe sets from a mid-20th century living room in Lost in Yonkers to Whisper House’s New England lighthouse to the Windy City itself in Robin and the 7 Hoods. The Center also has the exact layouts of stage floors, full-stage drops, and the space required for the complete assembly of all the scenic elements. The Tech Center also provides storage for the props and costumes from the Globe’s wide variety of productions. If you’ve seen many of our 15 yearly productions, you can appreciate how extensive these collections are and how they grow with each show. An early eighteenth century ball gown? A roaring twenties man’s suit? A 1960s flight attendant’s uniform? They’re all there and arranged chronologically. A pot-bellied stove? A chiffonier? An umbrella stand? They are all there and arranged by group. The initial impression is that it is the largest and best organized flea market you’ve ever seen.

Secondly, there is a commitment to producing shows that both entertain and resonate with the residents of southeastern San Diego. The initial production was the well-received musical, Kingdom, which played a week first at Lincoln High and then for six performances at the Globe. Kingdom was written by Aaron Jafferis and Ian Williams and told the story of two young men who get involved with the Latin Kings street gang. Jafferis amalgamated stories of friends with whom he grew up with the rise of the Latin Kings, which he witnessed in his home town of New Haven, Connecticut, to create with Williams a viscerally exciting show about the legacy of violence and the importance of breaking its cycle. In addition to the performances at Lincoln High, Aaron and Ian also worked with the students in workshops and helped them develop a short play of their own. Kingdom was a huge success by almost any measure.

Welcome to Arroyo's is the second production in this series. It is taking a different path than Kingdom. First it is being done as the first play of the Globe's 2010-11 season in the Sheryl and Harvey White Theatre. In addition to season subscribers, outreach is being done to neighborhood institutions like the Jacobs Center and the Jackie Robinson Family YMCA Center to broaden the audience for the show. After five weeks of performance at the Globe, the show will move to Lincoln High for two student matinees and two public weekend performances. Playwright Kristof-

The Residency Project is making a difference for southeastern San Diego and for The Old Globe. Like good neighbors everywhere, support is given, knowledge is shared and the community is served by the experience.

A third component is the development of theatre by the community itself. The Globe's Education Department has been working with a group of young adults to guide them in writing a play that tells personal stories of their experiences in the foster care system. A little understood part of a child's life in foster care is the so-called “aging-out” or “emancipation” of the child. At age 18 a young person is considered an adult and is no longer eligible to be in a foster home. This experience can be traumatic and sometimes results in homelessness, poverty and any of the other repercussions of such a lifestyle. The play, still in the development stage, is a chilling, tender, often funny, but always enlightening look at the lives of these individuals and how the Foster Care system works.

Playwright Kristoffer Diaz is also an educator, and he is excited about the Globe's engagement of students at Lincoln High. The Globe is working with him to develop an educational component of the Residency Project that will inform and complement the students' experience of the play. Free student matinee performances at Lincoln High will be supplemented by workshops with Globe teaching artists and other educational opportunities for the students. The artists' direct engagement with students and the local community in southeastern San Diego is an integral part of the development of Welcome to Arroyo’s.

PERFORMANCES MAGAZINE 9
WHAT WAS THE INITIAL INSPIRATION FOR WELCOME TO ARROYO’S?

Inspiration came from several places for this play. On the theatre side of things, I wanted to combine elements of the solo work of young urban artists like Danny Hoch, Sarah Jones, and John Leguizamo with the free-flowing, highly theatrical styles of contemporary plays like M. Butterfly, Zoot Suit and Six Degrees of Separation. In terms of content, I was interested in the creation of hip-hop culture (and the role that Latinos played in it), as well as the complicated gentrification of New York’s Lower East Side (and my role within that). And underneath it all, I had these characters: young men and women who looked and talked like people I actually knew. The characters came very early in the process; figuring out their stories and how it all tied into larger political and social narratives has been our ongoing journey.

HOW MUCH HAS THE PLAY CHANGED SINCE ITS INCEPTION?

I started writing Arroyo’s in 2000; it was my graduate thesis play at New York University. It was also the first full-length play I ever wrote. After a few false starts, the play finally got produced in Spring 2010 at Chicago’s American Theater Company. That’s a long time to work on a play. And I’m still working on it. There’s something about your first play; you never want to let it go. You always think it can be just a bit better, can do a more complete job of explaining to the world exactly who you were when you wrote it. In its earliest form, it was a play about the history of salsa music in New York City, until I realized that I really didn’t know a thing about salsa. That was my parents’ music; mine was hip-hop. Once I made that realization, Reina Rey came into the play, and the entire purpose of the play became something new. And as we work on each new production, there are both small changes (pop culture references, tweaks based on the characteristics of specific actors) and big shifts (in this version, for example, I’ve done a lot of work on Alejandro’s motivations and relationships) that always demand adjustments.

IS THERE A REAL LIFE COUNTERPART TO REINA REY, THE POSSIBLE HIP-HOP PIONEER MENTIONED IN THE PLAY?

Not exactly. As Lelly says in the play, we know that there were lots of Puerto Ricans in the South Bronx in the late seventies, and we know that there were a lot of Puerto Rican women around back then, and it’s not a huge jump to imagine that one of those Puerto Rican women somehow played a major role in the creation of hip-hop music. But there are no hard and fast facts about any one individual. The closest parallel that I know of is probably Lady Pink, an Ecuadorian woman who is hailed as one of the most important pioneers in the field of graffiti art.

HOW DO YOU FEEL ABOUT THE GENTRIFICATION OF THE LOWER EAST SIDE?

I’m conflicted because I was a participant on both sides of the issue. I had family living in the projects throughout the eighties and nineties, when the Lower East Side was one of New York’s toughest neighborhoods. I was also one of the college kids who spent a few too many nights getting drunk in the neighborhood in the late nineties at faux trucker bars and trendy hotspots that forced the old residents elsewhere. I don’t even recognize today’s LES – it’s super trendy and, in my opinion, kind of tacky and obnoxious. I’m sad about what it’s become, but I also recognize my role in its transformation. And I can’t deny that it’s a lot safer, cleaner, and more financially viable now. So I’m not sure what I think of it all. I think that leads to some fun drama.

WHAT NEW PROJECTS DO YOU HAVE IN THE PIPELINE?

I’ve got new play commissions from Center Theatre Group in Los Angeles, Teatro Vista and Goodman Theatre in Chicago, and Oregon Shakespeare Festival. I’m working on a future life for my play The Elaborate Entrance of Chad Deity. I’m even starting to dip my toes into the murky waters of the television world, although I haven’t quite cracked that nut yet. I’m busier than I’ve ever been in my writing career, and I absolutely love it.

SHAMMY DEE (Music Director) originally hails from the City of Angels. A graduate of UCSD, he has developed himself to become the consummate entertainer. Shammy has achieved success in three fields of entertainment – music, DJ’ing and acting. As a recording artist, he has three #1 hit singles on two national college charts off his debut album, Transcribed Thoughts.
As an actor, you can see his afro on multiple commercials, television shows such as “How I Met Your Mother” and “Mind Of Mencia,” and feature film The Runaways. Shammy’s skills, infectious energy and smile have brought him to DJ for established fashion/luxury brands such as Louis Vuitton, Burberry, Dior, JKY and St. Johns; department stores such as Nordstrom, Bloomingdales and Neiman-Marcus; and lifestyle/sport brands such as Puma, Adidas and Scion. He’s recently opened up for Michael Bublé and has worked with artists like the Baha Men and Ursula Rucker. He’s excited to help develop the soundscapes and funky beats for Welcome to Arroyo’s.

AARON RHYNE (Projection Design) Mr. Rhyne’s designs include: The Old Globe: Whisper House and Working. Opera: Jerry Springer: The Opera (Carnegie Hall, Sydney Opera House). Off Broadway: Graceland (Lincoln Center Theater), Spirit Control (Manhattan Theatre Club), Colin Quinn: Long Story Short, directed by Jerry Seinfeld (45 Bleecker), Dutchman (Cherry Lane Theatre), Taylor Mac’s The Lily’s Revenge (HERE Arts Center). Her regional theatre credits include productions for the Dallas Theater Center, La Jolla Playhouse, Arizona Theatre Company, Cleveland Play House, The Old Globe, San Diego Repertory Theatre and Nebraska Repertory Theater. Ms. Lohr has been a member of Actors’ Equity Association since 1987.

LOUIS G. SPISTO (Executive Producer) directs both the artistic and administrative activities of The Old Globe. During his tenure, Mr. Spisto spearheaded the return of the Shakespeare Repertory Company, revitalized the Globe’s new works program, resulting in 12 world premiere plays and 10 world premiere musicals, and produced more than 100 productions. Under Mr. Spisto’s leadership, ticket sales and contributions have increased substantially, and the fiscal health of the organization has been strengthened to support the expanded artistic vision. Mr. Spisto has successfully led the Globe’s $75 million Capital Campaign and managed the development of the Conrad Prebys Theatre Center, which includes a state-of-the-art arena theatre and education center. An advocate of arts education, Mr. Spisto created a number of new programs that serve tens of thousands of young San Diegans each year. These programs include a bilingual summer Shakespeare intensive, a major initiative in southeastern San Diego which includes the development of new works for younger and more diverse audiences, and free student matinees of the Globe’s regular productions. Mr. Spisto holds a Master’s degree from the University of Wisconsin and a Bachelor’s degree from the University of Notre Dame. He has served as chief executive for the Pacific Symphony, Detroit Symphony and American Ballet Theatre.

CRAIG NOEL (Founding Director) was first appointed director in 1939, directing 15 productions prior to World War II. Since then he directed more than 200 plays of all styles and periods and produced an additional 270 productions. His vision for The Old Globe resulted in the establishment of the Shakespeare Festival and the San Diego Junior Theatre in the late 40s, the expansion to two theatres in the ‘50s, Globe Educational Tours in the ‘70s and Teatro Meta and the Old Globe/University of San Diego MFA program in the ‘80s. During the 1940s, Mr. Noel served as dialogue director for the 20th Century Fox Studios and was the former director of the Ernie Pyle Theatre in Tokyo. Described by Variety as the eminence grise of San Diego theatre, Mr. Noel is one of the few San Diegans to have had an entire year (1987) proclaimed in his honor, and to be named one of San Diego’s “Living Treasures.” He was a founder of the California Theatre Council and a former vice president of the California Confederation of the Arts. His numerous honors include The San Diego Union-Tribune list of 25 persons who shaped the city’s history; the Governor’s Award for the Arts; University of Arizona Alumni Association’s Outstanding Citizen, for his contribution to their Fine Arts department; San Diego State University’s Outstanding Alumnus; Conservator of American Arts Award from American Conservatory Theater; the San Diego Press Club Headliner Award; San Diego Gentleman of Distinction Award; and a combined tribute from the Public Arts Advisory Council and the San Diego County Board of Supervisors. Mr. Noel was particularly proud of the following three honors representing education and theatre: Honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters, University of San Diego, Honorary Doctorate in Fine Arts, San Diego State University and the annual Awards for Excellence in Theatre named in his honor by the San Diego Theatre Critics Circle. In 2007, he received the National Medal of Arts – the nation’s highest honor for artistic excellence – in a ceremony at the White House. Craig Noel died on April 3, 2010 at the age of 94.

A successful production of Welcome to Arroyo’s demands many different things. At the Globe, we are working in the round for the first time which has pushed us to approach moments with a bit more style and fun. We sought out artists who are new to the theatre like a DJ music director and several graffiti artists. This cross-mixing of artists is what creates the energy in the theatre and brings together a different flavor of language and art forms. It’s great to see this play grow and continue reaching audiences in different parts of the country.

I first worked with Kris Diaz on Welcome to Arroyo’s around 2003 at South Coast Repertory and we’ve continued working together on it over the years. We did a workshop production of it at the Summer Play Festival in New York City in 2005 and officially premiered it at the American Theater Company in Chicago this past spring. Kris and I have been friends for many years. We’ve grown up together in many respects and have a shorthand collaborative working rapport. There is trust and a sense of humor between us which makes it easy to work and a blast to be around. It’s been quite a ride over the years, however we do have the occasional argument about sports…”

I love music and grew up with hip-hop. I had such a blast working on the turntables with the cast and Shammy during rehearsals. I admire the folks who can rock a party. It’s a pretty amazing thing to be able to keep a party going. I’ll keep trying in theatre but from the back row instead of behind a turntable.

I like to think of Welcome to Arroyo’s as a celebration of family, love and hip-hop. It’s fantastic to build a new production with such a great cast and design team. Arroyo’s also celebrates Latino/a culture which is important to me being from Texas and now living in New York City myself. I think Kris’ work truly reflects a multicultural perspective still not represented on our stages. I hope this kind of work continues to get supported around the country as it has been here at the Globe.

Jaime Castañeda is the director of Welcome to Arroyo’s.

The Old Globe’s many education programs provide exciting learning experiences for children and adults throughout the year and Teaching Artists play an important role in many of those programs. From the early childhood adventure of the Theatre Tots program to inspiring workshops for educators, the Globe’s Teaching Artists offer their expertise and artistry to enlighten learners of all ages.

The Old Globe’s Teaching Artists are experienced, professional theatre artists (often actors and directors) who are also gifted educators. With their unique and varied backgrounds, they enjoy sharing their knowledge with others and work effectively in bridging the theatre and the academic worlds.

Old Globe Teaching Artists often make multiple classroom visits to schools throughout San Diego County providing residency programs that teach children about acting, Shakespeare and playwriting. Residencies give students an in-depth look at the art form and more opportunities for creating exciting theatre on their own.

Sometimes Teaching Artists lead a short workshop right before a group of students sees one of our shows. These workshops give the students insight into the plot, characters, directorial choices and other pertinent elements of Globe productions.

Classroom teachers also benefit from Teaching Artist programs. The Old Globe offers professional development seminars and workshops that give educators an opportunity to explore ways to use theatre to teach other core curriculum concepts. Using concepts learned from these programs, teachers discover exciting new ways of approaching subject matter and enlivening their classes. Theatre teachers also benefit from technical theatre seminars with our Teaching Artists and crafts persons.

Even Teaching Artists take workshops. All Old Globe Teaching Artists participate in training seminars, learning new techniques and collaborating with their colleagues to build their skills and to be inspired to teach more effectively.

To learn more about The Old Globe’s Education programs email us at GlobeLearning@TheOldGlobe.org.
The Old Globe's ability to maintain the highest standard of excellence, while keeping ticket prices affordable, is due in large part to the financial support of more than 2,000 individuals, businesses, foundations and government agencies. Please join us in giving a warm thanks and recognition to these leaders who have made tonight and our 629 other performances possible. The Old Globe appreciates the support of those who have stepped into the spotlight.
