Rafta, Rafta...
Welcome to THE OLD GLOBE

THE GLOBE AT A GLANCE

The sixth-largest regional theatre in the country, The Old Globe offers more programming and a greater repertoire than any theatre of its size.

As a not-for-profit theatre with an annual budget averaging $20 million, the Globe earns $10 million in ticket sales and must raise an additional $10 million from individual and institutional tax-deductible donations.

The Globe provides more than 20 different community and education programs to nearly 50,000 people annually.

The Old Globe has sent 20 productions to Broadway since 1987.

In 1987, The Old Globe/University of San Diego Master of Fine Arts program was established to provide the highest caliber in training of young classical actors.

Our main stage season is about families. From Brighton Beach to Osage County and in between, Bolton, England. These plays reveal what we know – that families have the same basic concerns and needs despite their geographic and cultural differences. In Rafta, Rafta... we are introduced to an immigrant Indian family whose relationships between parents and children and husband and wife will feel all too familiar to many of us.

Ayub Khan-Din, one of the most prominent playwrights working in England, based his play on All in Good Time by Bill Naughton (author of Alfie). Ayub smartly saw the similarities between working class English families of the 1960s and modern Indian families in Britain.

Director Jonathan Silverstein’s productions in New York have been hailed, and I’m pleased to bring him back to San Diego. Joining him in realizing the world of Rafta, Rafta... are designers whose work has enlivened past productions: Alexander Dodge for sets, Christal Weatherly (who was a classmate of Jonathan’s at UCSD) for costumes, Lap Chi Chu for lights and Paul Peterson for sound.

So welcome to the world of Rafta, Rafta..., exotic yet totally familiar.

As The Old Globe’s 2011-2012 Board Chair, I am privileged to address you in this space as you prepare to experience a performance of the extraordinarily high quality you expect from the Globe. You may laugh or cry, be stirred or disturbed, but throughout you will marvel at the magic of stagecraft. You will forget routine pressures and be transported to different worlds. If all goes well, you’ll emerge more empowered with understanding and a clearer fix on your place in the world.

While you savor your experience, remember that the price you paid covered only about half the cost of delivering the Globe’s theatrical magic. The Globe is a not-for-profit organization, which means that all who enjoy our performances owe a profound debt to our generous donors who contribute over $5 million annually. And that doesn’t count much larger contributions over the years to construct theatres like the amazing Sheryl and Harvey White Theatre, which opened last year, that make our new Conrad Prebys Theatre Center the envy of other great theatre companies.

Enjoy the performance and consider joining other patrons whose generosity will preserve and advance The Old Globe for many generations to come.

Sincerely,

Harold W. Fuson, Jr.

Ayub Khan-Din is most famous for his play East is East, which was made into a successful film in 1999. A sequel, entitled West is West, was recently released. Khan-Din first wrote Rafta, Rafta... for England’s National Theatre and its extraordinary success in London led to a national tour. Here he talks about his experiences writing Rafta, Rafta... and the legacy of Bill Naughton.
When I was first approached to direct Rafta, Rafta... I was faced with an exciting challenge: what on Earth would I, a nice Jewish boy from Rhode Island, have to say about Indians living in Britain? As a director you are often called upon to delve into unfamiliar topics, yet I feared a play about such a foreign culture might prove difficult for me to connect with. Yet with every scene, I found myself drawn into its quite familiar threads.

In our story, we meet the Dutts and the Patels, two Indian families living in Bolton, a working-class suburb of Greater Manchester, UK, as they come together after the wedding of their children. As in any family, the longer we spend with them, the more we discover their complex histories: Atul, the groom, and his father cannot seem to get along; Vina, the bride, is much closer to her father, much to the dismay of Vina’s mother; and both sets of parents share awkward histories that are revealed as they grapple with their children’s marriage.

In the small, well-observed and often comical details of family life, I began to see parts of my own boisterous and loving family in the ways the Dutts and Patels interacted. Like Eeshwar, my father often got in trouble for saying inappropriate things at the kitchen table; Lopa’s disdain for chilli pickle, a popular Indian condiment, mirrors my mother’s aversion to my own overuse of ketchup on any available food; and Lopa and Lata’s use of guilt is familiar to any Jewish family.

Perhaps most potently, the issues everyone in this play faces as “outsiders” resonated with me emotionally. Within their daily lives, Atul feels different from his father (and also the British Asians of his generation) and Vina’s mother feels her marriage is out of step with others she observes. But even in a larger sense, the general dislocation of immigrants living in Britain represents these characters’ feelings of being out of the mainstream, a common thread to which I am drawn.

Ayub Khan-Din adapted Rafta, Rafta... from Bill Naughton’s 1965 work All in Good Time, a play with the same story, yet focusing on working-class, white families in Bolton. It is quite astonishing how easily the story translates from 1965 to present day. The emotional themes of the plays are exactly the same, despite the different communities shown.

It is the epic themes of the play plus the minutely observed details of the family that make me realize that Rafta, Rafta... is indeed a universal story. Its themes are familiar to any family: can one ever truly cross the generational divide between parents and their children; what does one do when traditional paths conflict with a very different modern reality; can one move beyond problems in a marriage, whether it be six weeks or 20 years old; how can one break free of being different, both within a family and the world at large?

The title of Rafta, Rafta... translates in Hindi as “slowly, slowly.” Mr. Khan-Din suggests that the answers to these big questions in life may only be gleaned from patience. As in any relationship, it takes some time to get to know one another. This is a lesson to which anyone, no matter what culture they are from, can connect.
1700s  BRITAIN ASSUMES THE UPPER HAND
The Mogul Empire was in a state of collapse by the 1720s. European powers were competing for control in India and sought alliances with the shaky states that inherited the Mogul territories. The British East India Company, a private trading company founded a century earlier, established its own army in India that was composed of British troops as well as native soldiers called sepoys. The British interests in India gained military victories from the 1740s onward, and the company gradually strengthened its hold, even instituting a court system.

1800s  THE RAJ ENTERS THE LANGUAGE
The British rule in India became known as The Raj, which was derived from the Sanskrit term raja, meaning king. Incidentally, a number of other terms came into English usage during The Raj: bangle, dungaree, khaki, pundit, seersucker, jodhpurs, cushy, pajamas and many more.

1857  RESENTMENT SPILLS OVER
Resentment toward the British had been building for some time, and new policies that allowed the British to annex some areas of India exacerbated tensions. Culture and religious clashes also played a part in the deepening rift. For example, sepoys objected to newly-issued rifle cartridges that were greased with pig and cow fat, thus making them unacceptable for both Hindu and Muslim soldiers. By early 1857 things had reached a breaking point.

1857-1858  THE INDIAN REBELLION
The Indian Rebellion of 1857 was a turning point in the history of Britain in India. It erupted in May 1857 when sepoys rose up against the British in Meerut and then massacred all the British they could find in Delhi. Uprisings spread throughout British India. It was estimated that less than 8,000 of nearly 140,000 sepoys remained loyal to the British. The British dispatched more troops to India and eventually succeeded in putting down the mutiny, resorting to harsh tactics to restore order. The large city of Delhi, however, was left in ruins, and many sepoys who had surrendered were executed by British troops.

1858  CALM IS RESTORED IN BRITISH INDIA
Following the Indian Rebellion, the British East India Company was abolished and the British crown assumed full rule of India. Reforms were instituted, which included tolerance of religion and the recruitment of Indians into the civil service. While the reforms sought to avoid further rebellions through conciliation, the British military in India was also strengthened. The symbol of the new British rule in India was the office of the Viceroy, a royal official appointed to run India on behalf of the British monarchy.

1885  INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS
Although the British succeeded in suppressing the 1857 Rebellion, they could not stop the growth of political awareness in India. The Indian National Congress was founded in December 1885 and became the embodiment of the national awakening in the country. The aims of the Congress were promotion of friendship and cooperation amongst nationalist political workers; eradication of racial, creed or provincial prejudices; formulation of popular demands and their presentation before the government; and, most important of all, the training and organization of public opinion in the country.

1918-1947  THE GANDHIAN ERA
Mahatma Gandhi dominated the Indian political scene from 1918 to 1947. It was the most intense and eventful phase of India’s freedom struggle. Gandhi provided the leadership of the highest order and his philosophy of non-violent Satyagraha became the most potent weapon to drive out the British from Indian soil. The nationalist movement developed over decades, and India finally achieved its independence in 1947.
1600s A NEW HOME
Following the establishment of the British East India Company, officials in the company recruited lascars, or Indian sailors and militiamen, to replace vacancies in their crews while on voyages in India. Many of these lascars were then refused passage back to their homeland and were forced to remain in London. There were also some ayahs, domestic servants and nannies of wealthy British families, who accompanied their employers back to Britain when their stay in Asia came to an end. Young Indians from the Malabar Coast were being recruited as servants at the end of the 17th century, and Indo-Portuguese cooks from Goa were retained by captains from voyage to voyage.

1700s-1800s COMMUNITIES BEGIN TO FORM
Because the majority of early Asian immigrants were lascar seamen, the earliest Indian communities were found in port towns. One of the most famous early Bengali immigrants to Britain was Sake Dean Mahomet, a captain of the British East India Company. In 1810, he founded London’s first Indian restaurant, the Hindoostane Coffee House. By the mid-19th century, there were thousands of Indian seamen, diplomats, scholars, soldiers, tourists, businessmen and students in Britain.

1900s IMMIGRANT NUMBERS GROW
By the early 20th century, there were around 70,000 Indians in Britain. As the number of these new Britons increased, they began to subdivide themselves according to their linguistic and religious backgrounds. Prior to World War II, many of these immigrants worked in unskilled jobs for low wages, but an increase in educated, skilled Indian immigrants and the many jobs left open by departing British soldiers led to new opportunities.

1940s-1960s WORLD WAR II AND AFTER
Following World War II and the breakup of the British Empire, immigration to Britain greatly increased. Manual workers were recruited to fulfill the labor shortage that resulted from the war. These included Indians who were recruited to work on the railways as they had done in India. Many immigrants from the Punjab region worked in the foundries of the English Midlands, and a large number of Sikhs worked at Heathrow Airport in West London. A large number of people left India to join their families in Britain, creating larger and more tightly-knit communities.

1962-1971 RESTRICTIONS ARE ENACTED
Spurred by this new pressure on national resources, the British government passed the Commonwealth Immigrants Act 1962 and Immigration Act 1971, which largely restricted further primary immigration, although family members of already-settled migrants were still allowed to come over. During the 1960s and 1970s, large numbers of East African Indians, who already held British passports, entered the UK after they were expelled from Kenya, Uganda and Zanzibar as a result of the emergence of African Nationalism. Many of these people had been storekeepers in Africa and opened shops when they arrived in the UK. Higher wages for labor and good health care and welfare systems were also an attractive draw for new Britons, despite the laws enacted by the government.

2000s THE BRITISH INDIANS OF TODAY
By the early 21st century, the British Indian community had grown to number over one million, and the union of traditional and modern practices is evident even today. The custom of arranged marriages was brought over to Britain, but has been slowly waning during the last three decades. The emergence of Indian businesses such as food shops, cinemas, video stores, insurance firms and building societies has helped newer generations of British Indians to identify with their origins and long history both in Britain and India.

His second play, Last Dance at Dum Dum (1999), concerns the septuagenarian members of the dwindling Anglo-Indian community in Calcutta, still clinging tightly to their old imperial past. Members of the Craig Noel League are ensuring a successful future for The Old Globe by contributing to the Endowment Fund or including the Globe in their Estate Plans. We thank our members for their legacy gifts and urge others to join them in the Craig Noel League.

Earnings generated from the Endowment Fund support the Theatre’s artistic and educational programming, helping sustain the Globe’s high level of artistic excellence. As future generations discover great theatre at the Globe, they will have our Craig Noel League donors to thank. Globe staff can advise how to leave a lasting gift to the Globe whether it is a cash contribution, a charitable bequest in your will or living trust, a Charitable Remainder Trust, Lead Trusts, Gift Annuities, Life Estates or a number of other available options.

As we celebrate the Globe’s 75th Anniversary as a local cultural landmark and national icon, it is time to build for the future. Join those listed below who have chosen to support our Theatre forever and help secure the future of The Old Globe – for the next 75 years – and beyond!

A limited number of the lightweight headsets, as well as induction neck loops, may be obtained from the house manager prior to performances.
