NOBODY LOVES YOU
A World Premiere Musical Comedy
Welcome to The Old Globe

The Old Globe began its journey with Itamar Moses and Gaby Alter’s Nobody Loves You in 2010, and we are thrilled to officially launch the piece here in its world premiere production. The Globe has a longstanding relationship with Itamar Moses. He was a Globe Playwright-in-Residence in 2007-2008 when we produced the world premieres of his plays Back Back Back and The Four of Us. Nobody Loves You is filled with the same whip-smart humor and insight that mark Itamar’s other works, here united with Gaby’s vibrant music and lyrics. Together they have created a piece that portrays, with a tremendous amount of humor and heart, the quest for love in a world in which romance is often commercialized.

Just across Copley Plaza, the Globe is presenting another musical, the acclaimed The Scottsboro Boys, by musical theatre legends John Kander and Fred Ebb. We hope to see you back this summer for our 2012 Summer Shakespeare Festival. Under Shakespeare Festival Artistic Director Adrian Noble, this outdoor favorite features Richard III, As You Like It and Inherit the Wind in the Lowell Davies Festival Theatre. The summer season will also feature Michael Kramer’s Divine Rivalry as well as Yasmina Reza’s Tony Award-winning comedy God of Carnage. As always, we thank you for your support as we continue our mission to bring San Diego audiences the very best theatre, both classical and contemporary.

As San Diego’s largest not-for-profit performing arts organization, The Old Globe’s operating budget of $20 million sustains year-round productions on three stages, an audience of more than 250,000, education and community programs serving nearly 50,000 and artistic development programs designed to advance the future of American theatre.

As you know, charitable support through grants and contributions is vital to sustaining these activities, and one of the most vital funding sources for The Old Globe is the City of San Diego’s Commission for Arts and Culture, which, through an arduous vetting process, allocates contracts for services provided. Funding comes through the transient occupancy tax (TOT), which is paid by tourists who stay at hotels and not by local citizens. The goal of the Commission is to fund organizations that stimulate the economy, attract tourism, reflect the diversity of our region and improve the quality of life for San Diegans.

With each annual budget cycle, funding for the Commission is at risk. We encourage you, as Globe supporters, to tell City Councilmembers and the Mayor that you value programs supported by the Commission and that you advocate for keeping Commission funding as a high priority.

If you are interested in learning more about public funding and how it impacts Globe programs, please contact the Development Department. Thank you for all you do as advocates and friends. We greatly appreciate it.

Enjoy the performance.

Sincerely,

An Interview with Itamar Moses and Gaby Alter

Where did the idea behind Nobody Loves You come from?

ITAMAR MOSES: Quite a few years ago our director, Michelle Tattenbaum, brought me in as the book writer on another musical, a dark, funny piece that used as its frame an episode of a television news magazine. Over the course of working on it, the idea of using a reality TV conceit lodged in my mind as an interesting world to musicalize. At about the same time, Gaby Alter, who is an old friend of mine, had moved to New York and enrolled in the graduate musical theatre writing program at NYU, and we always said that when he was done with the program that the two of us would write a musical together. I brought up the reality TV idea, and specifically the idea of using it as a lens to investigate our cultural obsession with stories of perfect romance that on some level we all know to be false. Gaby liked the idea, and, five and a half short years later, here we are in San Diego.
GABY ALTER: We also thought the story would make a good musical because reality TV is heightened reality, just as musicals are heightened because of the singing. Originally the conceit of our show was that people only sang when they were on camera. We eventually dropped that, because it got in the way of our storytelling. Still, at what times people burst into song in the show and what type of music they sing says a lot about how complicit they are with reality TV's falsely heightened reality. On the other hand, we're not cynics, and there is real love in this story. So there is another kind of singing, when people are moved by their genuine emotions to do so, just like in other musicals.

ITAMAR MOSES: Even though we got more flexible with our initial conceit, this idea about reality vs. heightened reality remains there, in the bones of the piece, in a way that I think draws some deep parallels, not just between musicals and reality television, but also to things like alcohol, religion and even the whole notion of infatuation itself.

Do you watch a lot of reality TV?

GABY ALTER: I don’t watch very much reality TV myself. Of the shows I’ve seen, I like Project Runway and the one about hairdressers. Those are both shows about artists and creativity, so obviously I identify with the contestants. (The judging process reminds me of grad school.) I think Itamar and Michelle are much better versed in shows like The Bachelor. I did watch one of the season finales and thought it was kind of weird because the people did seem to really think they were finding “the one.” This was clearly an extremely contrived situation, and yet the emotions were genuine.

ITAMAR MOSES: Notice how Gaby pretends he’s not insulting me when he says I’m “better versed” in The Bachelor than he is, as though I did more of my homework than he did. But, yeah, I have that complex love-hate relationship with reality TV that I think a lot of people have. I think Project Runway is genuinely good, and I like Face Off, with the special effects artists. Basically the best ones are ones where people are displaying a genuinely impressive skill that can be primarily evaluated visually (Top Chef is also good but crippled by the fact that you can’t smell or taste the food). But it’s true, I have to confess that I’ve watched more of The Bachelor/ Bachelorette than I can possibly justify as research for this musical, which, in my defense, is how it started. Every season of that show is like a fascinating slow motion train wreck, and even though 90% of the couples that get engaged at the end of the show break up within a year, every season the contestants talk about it like it’s definitely going to work, they all parrot the same rhetoric. There’s this massive disconnect between the world of the show and everything you’d see if you just pulled back the lens even slightly. Which is very much what our show is about.

Do you see Jeff and Jenny’s story as something specific to this generation?

ITAMAR MOSES: I’d say it’s a universal story that inevitably has the particular trappings of the media and technology that are ascendant right now. The need to protect yourself with irony while actually having a core of earnestness—which is sort of how I’d describe our two heroes—is not as new as we sometimes pretend. So I’d say they’re part of a long, long tradition of romantic comedy couples but hopefully a worthy addition to the canon.

GABY ALTER: Jenny and Jeff are fighting to be authentic to themselves and find a real connection in a society that has a lot of rigid narratives and expectations. As Itamar says, the particulars are what come with our current technology, but that’s a problem that has dogged self-aware people forever.

The idea of “performing” versus “being real” or “being yourself” is an issue with dating in general, of course, but it seems to be heightened in this reality show context.

ITAMAR MOSES: I think this is an idea that is both very current and very ancient. It’s basically about what academics might call the public sphere vs. the private sphere (and indeed the academic in our show, Jeff, makes some comments early on about the blurring of the line between public and private in the house). I think the reason the idea goes back so far is that it has to do with some mechanism in our brains that makes us feel like we matter, like the things we do have weight and meaning, only to the extent that other people are aware of us, to the extent we’re being watched.

GABY ALTER: This idea has always been central to our show. Originally Itamar came to me with a lyric, “What’s the point of happiness if nobody’s watching?” That was his thesis about what drives people to be on reality shows. I think Jeff ends up wrestling with this, because he considers himself to be above this crass, worldly desire. But similar to Aschenbach, the ascetic artist in Death in Venice, the world ultimately bites him in the ass. By the way, I’m pretty sure that’s the only similarity between our show and Death in Venice.

ITAMAR MOSES: The new element in our time, probably, is the democratization of access to the public sphere via things like Facebook and Twitter and YouTube and even the affordability of digital filmmaking equipment. Because what this means is that absolutely everybody feels that the world stage (in at least some small way) is available to them and that they have a right to it. Which cuts both ways: it probably stokes the unhealthiness of this need in us, this need to be watched, but also amazing things can spread very quickly.
Today’s reality dating shows, like the one in Nobody Loves You, are just the latest evolution of a phenomenon that started almost 50 years ago. Our appetite for watching real people find romance on television started in the 1950s and ’60s, when America fell in love with the game show and with watching people compete — succeed or fail — in front of a national audience. In the early 2000s, the number of reality dating shows skyrocketed. Even as they relied more and more on voyeurism and exploitation, most of these shows still claimed to be about “real” love and happily-ever-after.

BLIND DATE (1949)
Originally a radio show, “Blind Date” featured men trying to persuade women to go out with them over the telephone.

CHANCE FOR ROMANCE (1958)
A panel made up of a sociologist, a marriage counselor and a psychologist paired up the two contestants they thought had the best “chance for romance.”

THE DATING GAME (1965)
Hidden from view behind a wall, three young men competed for a date with a single woman who chose the winner based on their answers to romantic questions. Men also got a chance to do the choosing. Fun, lighthearted and flirty, “The Dating Game’s” biggest ratings ploy involved celebrity guests. Michael Jackson, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Sally Field and Ron Howard all appeared on the show.

LOVE CONNECTION (1983)
When the culture at large entered the era of video dating, TV jumped on the bandwagon. “Love Connection” let contestants chose a date after watching three videos of members of the opposite sex. The two then shared with host Chuck Woolery the story of what happened on their date. “Love Connection” introduced the idea of audience participation in TV dating, as the studio audience also had the power to pick a match for the contestant and send them out on another date.

BLIND DATE (1998)
Video cameras followed two people as they went on a blind date. Perhaps inspired by VH1’s popular “Pop Up Video,” “Blind Date” offered humorous running commentary on those dates in the form of thought bubbles and subtitles that appeared over the date footage. Rather than trying to make happy romantic matches, the show intentionally arranged disastrous dates, which made better fodder for its snide pop-up commentary.
WHO WANTS TO MARRY A MULTI-MILLIONAIRE? (2000)

Fifty women, one from each state, competed beauty pageant-style for the chance to marry a wealthy bachelor. Widely seen as the nadir of TV dating shows, the two-hour show ended with a live wedding ceremony. Public outcry was fierce, but ratings were through the roof. The already controversial show sparked even more scandal when it was revealed that the millionaire’s ex-girlfriend had filed a restraining order against him for domestic violence, and the marriage was annulled within six months.

elimiDATE (2001)
A blind date started with one contestant and four dates. As the evening went on, the dates were eliminated one by one. Hot tubs were plentiful and sexual situations encouraged.

THE BACHELOR (2002)
Executive producer Mike Fleiss, the mind behind “Who Wants to Marry A Multi-Millionaire?,” also created the most successful of all reality dating shows: “The Bachelor.” The show followed a single bachelor as he dated his way through a pool of 25 women who were all living together in a luxury mansion. At the end of each episode, the show staged a “dramatic rose ceremony” in which the bachelor gave roses to the women he wanted to keep on the show; the rest were eliminated. “The Bachelor” launched many spinoffs (including “The Bachelorette”) and is the source of many of the reality show conventions spoofed in Nobody Loves You.

BOY MEETS BOY (2003)
The first gay dating show, Bravo’s “Boy Meets Boy” followed the basic structure of “The Bachelor”: a gay man (advised by his best friend) is offered his choice of 15 potential mates. In a surprise twist (which many critics saw as a ploy to lure straight viewers), some of those mates were actually straight, hoping to win a cash prize if the leading man picked him as his final choice. The gay community, which had originally been supportive, led an outcry against this twist. The show ran for only one season.

A “Bachelor”-style dating show for little people.

FLAVOR OF LOVE (2006)
A “Bachelor”-style dating show starring rapper Flavor Flav.

ROCK OF LOVE (2007)
A “Bachelor”-style dating show starring Bret Michaels of the rock band Poison.

MORE TO LOVE (2009)
A “Bachelor”-style dating show for full-figured contestants.

THE COUGAR (2009)
A “Bachelor”-style dating show for older women and younger men.

DATING IN THE DARK (2009)
Six contestants lived in a single house, coming together for group and individual dates. The twist: “Dating in the Dark” shot its surveillance footage with infrared cameras as dates unfolded in total darkness. With so many dating shows on the air, creators struggled to find sensational hooks to make their shows stand out from the crowd.

Full STEAM Ahead: ARTS EDUCATION Heats Up Science Learning

What do almost all Nobel Prize-winning scientists have in common? The arts. According to an article by Michele and Robert Root-Bernstein in Psychology Today, “almost all Nobel Laureates in the sciences actively engage in arts as adults. They are twenty-five times as likely as the average scientist to sing, dance, or act; seventeen times as likely to be a visual artist; twelve times more likely to write poetry and literature.... Many connect their art to their scientific ability with some riff on Nobel Prize-winning physicist Max Planck’s words: ‘The creative scientist needs an artistic imagination.’”

The recent emphasis on Science, Technology, Engineering and Math (STEM) in schools has become a clarion call by many in government. This STEM focus is intended to stimulate our economy and keep us ahead of the rest of the world when it comes to innovation and new technology. But when the focus is centered on STEM, other modes of learning are pushed to the side. Specifically, the arts are often cut from school curricula in order to make way for STEM courses.

Educators, parents, arts practitioners and businesspersons nationwide have rallied for a new cause: Replace STEM with STEAM. Adding the “A” (for Arts) to the mix powers us forward to reach the goals that STEM advocates seek. By providing rich arts training, students will develop the critical skills and creative thinking that allow for true innovation.

How can we know that the arts actually have an effect on student learning? Recently, Cal State San Marcos and the San Diego County Office of Education partnered on the DREAM project, a thorough study on improving reading scores. One group of teachers was given no additional training in how to use the arts in the classroom. The second group of teachers received only training and the third group received training plus each teacher was paired with a trained arts professional to incorporate the arts into their lessons.

The CSUSM study showed that the first group of children (no arts training for the teachers) had a fairly typical 25% increase in standardized test scores. The group whose teachers had some arts training gained a respectable 42% increase. But the children whose teachers had training plus the support of an arts professional increased their scores by an astonishing 87%. Practitioners in the arts education field were not surprised by the results. They have seen how the arts work in the classroom. They have seen children suddenly grasp a concept when presented with an arts-infused lesson on math or science. They have seen children focused and ready to learn after participating in an exhilarating theatre game or activity. They have seen bored and sullen students suddenly becoming engaged and enthusiastic learners when a lesson is taught through theatre.

Program co-director Merryl Goldberg noted that the study is remarkable for its scope, having been done in 10 schools. A study this thorough is rare, and the results have people taking notice. Researcher and program evaluator (and former Old Globe Education Director) Patti Saraniero, who compiled the data for the DREAM project, pointed out that the greatest gains were for the lowest performing students. Why is that important? Low-performing schools are often the first to lose their arts programs with administrators focusing on core curriculum and increasing standardized test scores. This study may help to guide administrators of low-performing schools in rethinking their approach when confronted with a mandate to increase test scores. The arts help children learn. And for some learners, the arts are crucial to the way they think.

The Old Globe’s Education Department works with schools countywide to bring quality arts programming to the classroom. Our on-site programs provide in-depth arts training to students who wish to study theatre. Only time will tell if these students will go on to be professional actors or Nobel Laureates, but one thing is sure: it’s full STEAM ahead for all students when the arts are included in the curriculum.
Annual Fund Donors

The Old Globe's ability to maintain the highest standard of excellence, while keeping ticket prices affordable, is due in large part to the financial support of more than 2,000 individuals, businesses, foundations and government agencies. Please join us in giving a warm thanks and recognition to these leaders who have made tonight and our 629 other performances possible. The Old Globe appreciates the support of those who have stepped into the spotlight.

A Planned Gift Ensures a Strong Tomorrow for The Old Globe

What is a Planned Gift?
Planned giving is simply a way to support The Old Globe through your estate plans by establishing an irrevocable bequest of property, stock or cash; a charitable trust; a living trust; or some other deferred giving instrument. In your estate plans, you have the ability to designate the specific use of the funds given to the Globe, and to help guide your decision, The Old Globe Board of Directors has established specific giving areas that you may choose from, including classical theatre and Shakespeare, education programs and new works.

How do I make a Planned Gift?
Simply call the Globe and schedule an appointment for a confidential meeting, or visit with your estate planner or attorney.

Join us and become a part of our active community with a variety of exciting events including an Annual Member Event, “Food for Thought” monthly lunches where you may dine with a Globe artist or attend one of the many Opening Night receptions held throughout the year.

To become a member of the Craig Noel League or to tell us of a gift you have already made, please contact Bridget Cantu Wear, Associate Director of Development, Planned Giving, at (619) 231-1941 x2312 or bcantuwear@TheOldGlobe.org.
