A Room with a View
A WORLD PREMIERE MUSICAL

MARCH 2012
Welcome to The Old Globe

The mission of The Old Globe is to preserve, strengthen, and advance American theatre by: Creating theatrical experiences of the highest professional standards; Producing and presenting works of exceptional merit, designed to reach current and future audiences; Ensuring diversity and balance in programming; Providing an environment for the growth and education of theatre professionals, audiences and the community at large.

This World Premiere production of Marc Acito and Jeffrey Stock’s enchanting A Room with a View marks the culmination of more than a year of development, workshops and rehearsals. It also represents The Old Globe’s ongoing commitment to launching new musicals and to making San Diego an artistic home for the best and brightest creative talent in theatre. A Room with a View follows a sheltered young English girl, Lucy Honeychurch, on her travels to Italy, where she learns about not only the world but also herself. We hope it will transport you to another time and place, sweeping you along on Lucy’s journey of discovery and romance.

We are also pleased to welcome director Scott Schwartz back to The Old Globe. Scott directed the Globe’s immensely successful productions of Golda’s Balcony, Broadway Bound, Brighton Beach Memoirs and Lost in Yonkers. Scott has been both a vital part of the development of A Room with a View and an ideal director for its World Premiere production.

As you may know, The Old Globe has embarked upon a nationwide search for new artistic leadership, assisted by the search firm AlbertHall&Associates. The firm was co-founded by former Globe Managing Director Tom Hall, whose knowledge of and commitment to The Old Globe will be a great asset to this process. We look forward to an exciting new chapter in the artistic life of The Old Globe as we continue to pursue our mission, serve our San Diego community and create some of the best theatre in the country.

The Old Globe’s premier place in the pantheon of American theatrical venues is secured in significant part by the consistent quality our resident professionals bring to the productions you see on our stages. The very length of our production schedule gives those professionals an opportunity to showcase their skills across a uniquely varied set of programs from musicals to classics to new plays and beyond.

This spring, we give you both Eugene O’Neill’s landmark American classic Anna Christie and A Room with a View, an exciting World Premiere that brings E.M. Forster’s novel to the musical stage for the first time.

While the quality and diversity of our 15-play production schedule is a key to our great success in maintaining an audience of more than 250,000 each year, the generosity of donors like you is ultimately what makes everything possible. Ticket sales last year covered slightly more than half our costs. Most of the rest came from donations large and small, and we take every opportunity to thank those of you responsible.

Our future depends on growing our base of subscribers and donors. Your support for the Globe not only ensures San Diego’s access to the best that American theatre has to offer, but makes possible a broad range of educational and supplementary artistic programs that enrich the community far beyond our stages.

Welcome to our theatres and enjoy the performance.

Sincerely,

Harold W. Fuson, Jr.

The Edwardian period in England (1901–1910) is often described as a Golden Age, a time of peace and prosperity that was shattered by the First World War. But it was also a time of transformation as social, cultural and political change loomed on the horizon.

There was money to be earned and spent during this period — more money than ever before, in the hands of people who had never possessed it. Edwardian society was still rigidly separated by class, a strict hierarchy that made itself felt in all aspects of life: from which pew you could occupy in your parish church, to which entrance of a shop you were permitted to use, to which railway car you could ride in, to which school you could attend. As the upper levels of society found themselves invaded by new money, and the lower echelons of society found help in new social welfare programs, those in the middle clung even more tightly to the outward signs of class distinction, comforted by the clear, bright lines that showed everyone their place.

The cultural changes that were underway were accompanied by changes in the country’s physical landscape as well. Industrialization grew. Railways expanded, spreading out from London into the countryside. The train and the bicycle worked together to transform formerly rural places like the Honeychurch’s little parish of Summer Street found in E.M. Forster’s A Room with a View. Suddenly, new classes of society — lower classes of society — could live in the country and commute easily into London.

Railways also carried English citizens abroad, giving them easy access to most of Europe. Forster satirizes the image of the English tourist in a foreign land.
clutching her Baedeker — the distinctive little red guidebook that became a bible for the English abroad. Tourism, like so many other aspects of Edwardian life, was something to be conducted by the book, according to a strict set of orderly principles.

For traveling, Edwardians had their Baedekers. At home, they had countless manuals of etiquette and behavior. (One of Forster’s childhood favorites was simply titled, Don’t.) These rules and restrictions fell most heavily on women, who were tightly corseted in more ways than one. Especially for unmarried women of the middle and upper classes, like Lucy Honeychurch, a violation of the rules of behavior, a hint of scandal, could ruin their chances at marriage. As women were not permitted to pursue professional careers as lawyers, doctors or bankers, marriage was their best way to maintain — and their only way to improve — their economic and social positions. The stakes could not have been higher.

By the end of the Edwardian period, cracks were beginning to show in British imperialism, although one-fourth of the world’s population remained under British rule. The efforts of the suffragette movement would soon pay off: women were granted the right to vote in England in 1918. The Liberal government that took power in 1906 had begun to institute vast social reform — pensions, national insurance, protection for labor unions — and also to raise taxes, changes that King Edward VII feared would “set class against class.” And soon, the Great War would change everything once again.

AN AUTHOR WITH A VIEW

A Room with a View was E.M. Forster’s third published novel. It appeared in 1908, after Where Angels Fear to Tread (1905) and The Longest Journey (1907). Its optimism, humor and romance have made it one of his most popular works. Forster himself said it was his “nicest” novel, and he considered its heroine, Lucy Honeychurch, one of his most successful characters. Although the novel is not explicitly autobiographical, Forster drew heavily on his own personal history to create its characters and settings.

Forster was born in London on January 1, 1879. After the death of his father, an architect, Forster was raised by his mother and her highly conservative family in Hertfordshire. An inheritance from his great-aunt gave him the financial means to attend Cambridge and to take the year-long tour of Italy and Greece that provided the spark for his literary imagination and fueled the writing of his early novels. In 1901, Forster traveled to Florence. He stayed in a small hotel on the banks of the Arno River, a pensione run by a Cockney landlady who catered to an almost exclusively English clientele. A young man of 22, Forster found himself hemmed in on all sides by older women, including his mother, who was his traveling companion. In a letter to a friend, he complained, “I wish I didn’t see everything with this horrible foreground of enthusiastic ladies, but it is impossible to get away from it.”

The Florence pensione where Forster stayed in 1901.

This pensione — a little bastion of tea, biscuits and Englishness holding firm against the chaotic and beautiful city of Florence — becomes the setting for the first half of A Room with a View. The novel’s heroine, like Forster himself, both longs and fears to explore the world outside the window. But Lucy is held back by an intricate web of social restrictions and family obligations, a web with which Forster was intimately familiar.

Throughout his young adulthood, Forster struggled to come to terms with his own sexuality. A gay man in a time when homosexuality was illegal, Forster’s youth was marked by a series of passionate attachments upon which he could never act. He based the character of George Emerson on a classmate at Cambridge, Hugh Owen Meredith, to whom A Room with a View is dedicated. Meredith’s physical beauty and grace, his lower class origins and his sharp intelligence (he went on to become an economic historian) all find expression in George, the object of Lucy’s desire and clearly Forster’s as well.

In the countryside, culture and art of Italy, Forster found a promise of freedom that captured his imagination. He set two novels and several short stories in Italy, always contrasting his confined English characters against their passionate Italian backdrop. When he returned to England, Forster gave a series of talks on Italian art for the Cambridge Local Lectures Board.

Forster’s enthusiasm for travel continued throughout his life. After publishing Howard’s End in 1910, he traveled in India, worked for the Red Cross in Egypt and finally returned to India to work as the private secretary for the Maharajah of Dewas. His travels there inspired his 1924 novel A Passage to India, the last novel he published during his lifetime. From then until his death in 1970, he worked as an essayist, literary critic, BBC broadcaster and outspoken proponent of civil liberties.

Following Forster’s death, one final novel appeared: Maurice (1971). Forster began writing Maurice in 1914, but because it dealt with homosexual characters in an open way, he chose to share it only with friends. (Some say it inspired D.H. Lawrence to write Lady Chatterley’s Lover.) Even as he prepared the work for posthumous publication, he left the manuscript with this note: “Publishable — but worth it?”

[D.M.A.]
In discussions with director Scott Schwartz, he emphasized that we needed to find a contemporary and somewhat abstract approach to the design. In the course of doing research, I sent him images of period postcards. Postcards are a very important plot element in the show, and it occurred to us that they become an apt metaphor for the ephemeral and fragile nature of these pivotal moments our heroine is going through over the course of the play. Every moment becomes potentially transformative for her.

All of the images directly reference moments or locations in the show. Sometimes they are fragments of a place, or fragments of a painting that’s referred to. Sometimes you get a fragment of a sky that then appears again later. It’s like a jigsaw puzzle, in that the images are disassembled and then reassembled in other moments in the play. For example, there are references to the tourist guidebook — the Baedeker — and we see a page from the guidebook, which then appears in various other scenes and locations. It’s a kind of cross-referenced collage.

Technical Director Ben Thoron has found a wonderful technique that allows us to print the images directly onto a translucent plastic twin-wall surface. It’s a material that’s frequently used to make greenhouses, in fact. It allows these pieces to be both structural and translucent, which is one of the critical parts of the show, that it feel very lightweight and very ethereal.

ANNA CHRISTIE

Eugene O’Neill’s poetic masterpiece won him his second Pulitzer Prize. ANNA CHRISTIE is a gripping account of the relationship between an old sailor and the daughter he hasn’t seen in almost 20 years. Their new bond becomes strained when she falls in love with a young man whose seafaring life isn’t what her father wants for her. When Anna reveals to both men the shameful secret she has been harboring, they come to understand the harsh reality of her past and show her compassion, love and forgiveness.

Old Globe Artistic Director Emeritus Jack O’Brien famously said that you don’t go to the theatre for the first time on your own; someone brings you.

That philosophy played heavily into the Globe’s decision to present student matinee performances of many of our shows. The idea was to bring students to the theatre for the first time in the hopes that they would learn to love theatre through the experience. Students come away from our matinees with their eyes opened to new ideas and possibilities. They are inspired and awed. They want to talk about what they have experienced and what it means to them. That is the power of theatre, and The Old Globe has worked tirelessly to ensure that thousands of students each year are provided the opportunity to see just what we’re about.

A strong student matinee program requires more than just opening the doors. At The Old Globe, our Education Department works hard to ensure that students are provided a strong introduction to the shows they will see, through study guides and classroom learning experiences. Our professional Teaching Artists plan powerful pre-show workshops that are conducted in school classrooms in the days and weeks before students will see the show. These sessions center on the major themes in the plays and how these themes may resonate for students. Through interactive theatre exercises, sharing of production-specific details and open discussion, students explore the show before they see it and are better prepared for the experience when they arrive at the theatre. Our carefully researched study guides provide teachers with the tools they need to present Standards-based lessons in class both before and after students have seen the show. These lessons are designed to provoke discussion and reflection and to bring students to a deeper understanding of the play’s content and of the role of theatre in society.

Tickets to the theatre are an out-of-reach expense for many of the students we serve. School budgets have been slashed to the bone, so paying for a field trip to the theatre is a near-impossibility for most educational institutions. This is where The Old Globe’s donors step up to the plate. They remember that once they were the ones who were invited to see a play for the very first time. They know how theatre has impacted their lives. And they provide the funding for us to give these matinees at absolutely no charge to the schools.

We are proud to continue this amazing program, and we thank our donors for making it possible. For more information about how you can sponsor a free student matinee and become the person responsible for bringing hundreds of students to the theatre for the first time, contact Marilyn McAvoy Bergman at (619) 231-1941 x2309.
The Old Globe's ability to maintain the highest standard of excellence, while keeping ticket prices affordable, is due in large part to the financial support of more than 2,000 individuals, businesses, foundations and government agencies. Please join us in giving a warm thanks and recognition to these leaders who have made tonight and our 629 other performances possible. The Old Globe appreciates the support of those who have stepped into the spotlight.

A Planned Gift Ensures a Strong Tomorrow for The Old Globe

What is a Planned Gift?
Planned giving is simply a way to support The Old Globe through your estate plans by establishing an irrevocable bequest of property, stock or cash; a charitable trust; a living trust; or some other deferred giving instrument. In your estate plans, you have the ability to designate the specific use of the funds given to the Globe, and to help guide your decision, The Old Globe Board of Directors has established specific giving areas that you may choose from, including classical theatre and Shakespeare, education programs and new works.

How do I make a Planned Gift?
Simply call the Globe and schedule an appointment for a confidential meeting, or visit with your estate planner or attorney.

Join us and become a part of our active community with a variety of exciting events including an Annual Member Event, “Food for Thought” monthly lunches where you may dine with a Globe artist or attend one of the many Opening Night receptions held throughout the year.

To become a member of the Craig Noel League or to tell us of a gift you have already made, please contact Bridget Cantu Wear, Associate Director of Development, Planned Giving, at (619) 231-1941 x2312 or bcantuwear@TheOldGlobe.org.

A Planned Gift ensures a strong tomorrow for The Old Globe.
