Welcome to THE OLD GLOBE

THE GLOBE AT A GLANCE

The sixth-largest regional theatre in the country, The Old Globe offers more programming and a greater repertoire than any theatre of its size.

As a not-for-profit theatre with an annual budget averaging $20 million, the Globe earns $10 million in ticket sales and must raise an additional $10 million from individual and institutional tax-deductible donations.

The Globe provides more than 20 different community and education programs to nearly 50,000 people annually.

The Old Globe has sent 20 productions to Broadway since 1987.

In 1987, The Old Globe/University of San Diego Master of Fine Arts program was established to provide the highest caliber in training of young classical actors.

We are indeed fortunate to have Matthew Lopez as The Old Globe’s Playwright-in-Residence. He is an emerging voice in the American theatre, a fresh talent whose unique perspective and memorable characters have caught the attention of audiences here and across the country. In 2010, the Globe’s acclaimed production of The Whipping Man paved the way for the play’s success in New York and across the country.

To create Somewhere, Lopez has drawn on his own family history. In 1958, the City of New York knocked down a 17-block region of the West Side to make way for Lincoln Center. Demolition was delayed so that choreographer Jerome Robbins could use those same streets to film the opening sequence of the great American musical West Side Story. For the Candelaria family in Somewhere, who love Broadway musicals and long to step into the spotlight, this moment brings together their greatest dreams and their worst fears.

Just like the Candelaria children, Matthew’s own father, aunt and uncle were extras on the set of West Side Story. Although the family in Somewhere is not based directly on Matthew’s family, when writing the role of Inez, he was inspired by his aunt, Broadway actress and dancer Priscilla Lopez, who created the role of Diana Morales in the original production of A Chorus Line. We are thrilled that Priscilla is here at the Globe in this world premiere production.

Somewhere is a love letter to musical theatre: the way it can spark the imagination, break through our defenses and connect us to our dreams. In West Side Story, as Tony looks forward to seeing his Maria he sings, “The air is humming, and something great is coming!”

With a new season comes a new opportunity for greater involvement with The Old Globe—one of helping to expand the number of businesses and corporations supporting our artistic and education programs.

This year, the Globe introduced its Corporate Partners Program in an effort to attract and retain critical charitable contributions from local and national companies. Corporations that support the Globe receive specially tailored benefits packages that include prominent logo recognition, valuable employee discounts to Globe productions and networking and client entertainment opportunities.

As the Globe works to grow our corporate donor base, we rely upon you, our audience of subscribers, ticket buyers and donors. Each of you is involved with many businesses in San Diego as an employee, a customer or an owner.

We urge you to think about connecting the Globe to your contacts who would be interested in supporting our programs and enjoying the membership benefits. Please call the Globe’s Development Department today to learn more about the Corporate Partners Program.

Once again, I extend our gratitude to all of you who so generously continue to support The Old Globe.

*In Memoriam
Tell us a little bit about the genesis of this play. Where did the idea and these characters come from? It stemmed primarily from this family legend about the experiences my father and his siblings had working as extras on the set of West Side Story in 1960. Everything else was filmed on a soundstage in Los Angeles, but the prologue, which has some of the most iconic Jerome Robbins choreography in it, was all shot on the streets of New York. And my dad and two of his three siblings, including Priscilla, were there, hanging out, waiting to be used as extras. I'd always just loved that they had that experience. You can see my father very clearly in one of the shots of the film.

That's sort of the micro side, and then on the macro side, I'd always been fascinated by Robert Moses; I'd always been fascinated by that tremendously fertile period in New York history right after World War II, when the city just shot up. There was this tremendous energy. It seemed as if the most amazing place you could ever hope to be was New York in the 50s. But with each of the things Robert Moses created, he destroyed twice as much. And there was nothing that would stand in Robert Moses’ way, even families. I wanted to take one of the great achievements of that period, Lincoln Center, which is indisputably a tremendous good—on the scale of 0 to 100, it comes as close to 100 in terms of pure goodness as any public endeavor ever has—and look at how even that came at a great price. No one stopped to ask, “Whose lives are we dramatically altering in order to accomplish this?” So the goal in some ways was to marry my very fond memories of these stories from my father’s childhood with this investigation into the cost of progress and the people who get caught under the wheels.

What makes musicals so important to the characters in the play? Oh my God, well, first of all, musicals are the most important thing ever in the history of the world. That should be stated first and foremost. It’s part of my upbringing, I think. It was instilled in me by my parents, who had it instilled in them by theirs, that there was no higher form of artistic expression than an 11 o’clock number. I had no idea who Simon and Garfunkel were; I did not know who the Beatles were for a very long time. I doubt my parents did either. It was all musical theatre being played in the house. But I have often said that these characters are not based on my family, they’re based on my love for my family, and to emphasize that point I put my family, the Lopezes, as offstage characters.

For the Candelarias, musical theatre is their entire lives. It is what fuels their dreams, fills their evenings. For the briefest time, it was what paid the bills—but certainly not enough or long enough to sustain a life in that field. And one thing that was really tantalizing about this era was that West Side Story was on Broadway, The Music Man was on Broadway, Gypsy was just about to open on Broadway. I could not think of a better time to go back and live in terms of being a theatre geek. I took particular pleasure in allowing this family to geek out during the heyday of that period. So musicals are the most important creation in the history of the world. They’re more important than fire. Than the printing press. Than the wheel. I’d put them number one, and everything else can fight for second place, as far as I’m concerned.

What are you most excited about in this world premiere production? I’m so excited about this cast. I know that these characters are not just in good hands but in loving, gentle hands. These people care very deeply about the characters they’re playing, which doesn’t happen all the time, and it’s such a blessing for a writer when it does.
All in the Family

Playwright Matthew Lopez interviews his aunt, renowned Broadway actress and dancer Priscilla Lopez.

Matthew Lopez: So, I’m interviewing you.
Priscilla Lopez: You are?
ML: Yes! You’re at the Globe to do my play.
PL: Who are you?
ML: I’m Tony Kushner.

PL: Oh my gosh, I’ve got the wrong play.
ML: (laughs) Well, to start, and tell me if you don’t want to answer this question...
PL: Uh oh, how old I am?
ML: Well, yes. How it all started. Could you talk a bit about your very first Broadway audition?
PL: My first Broadway audition was for this little show called Gypsy.
ML: With Tyne Daly? (laughs)
PL: No, Ethel Merman. I am trying to remember how my mother knew about that audition. Maybe she read about it in the paper. But she told me about it, and there I was, at the Broadway Theatre, and they lined you up in the alley—back when the theatre had an alley. They put us in groups of 15 or 20 kids. You’d line up, and they would come by and point at you and say, “You, you and you stay. The rest of you: thank you.” That was it. So I had already waited three hours in the rain...
ML: It always rains in these kinds of stories.
PL: And the group before me, one little girl just burst into tears, and I thought, “If they don’t pick me, I’m not crying.” And I go in, and they line us up and say, “You, you and you stay. The rest of you, thank you.” And my heart is in my throat, and I’m one of the “thank yous.” And I went into the alley and burst into tears. And that was the last time I cried until I got my first Broadway show.

ML: Your career, from your very first audition, has been at the dead center of all the good stuff. You worked for Bob Fosse in Pippin, you worked for Michael Kidd. And to have been in Stephen Sondheim and Hal Prince’s original production of Company! And then, of course, there was A Chorus Line. So much has been said about it, but looking back on it, could you in any way boil down what A Chorus Line means 35 years later and what it means to you?
PL: One word: gift. The greatest gift. First, a) having participated in a groundbreaking way of working, then b) having my own story told and c) once that story went out into the world, having it affect so many people. Then the most recent gift I guess would be d) not only inspiring people in general who wanted to be in the business, but also this whole wave in the Latino world that I had no idea I was affecting at all. And why? Because I had that “z” at the end of my name, which I had been told to get rid of! The most recent tale I heard, when I was working on In the Heights, was from Mandy Gonzalez. She said, “When I saw that ‘z’ in your name, I knew I was going to be OK.” So it affected that whole generation. And now I’m playing all their mothers. I can’t tell you how many Latino mothers I have played. And I am grateful to play them, and I will be happy to continue to play that role, and then become the grandmother, and then probably the bag lady on the street.

ML: Speaking of that role, you are playing a Latino mother in Somewhere. At the risk of fishing for a compliment or spoiling for a fight, what does this play mean to you and your personal journey?
PL: It’s a gift as well. It’s a beautiful play, written so beautifully. All the characters are so fully developed and real and honest and funny and touching. And it’s written by a very talented young playwright, who I happen to know! And I see it as a new story but, I think, with the old heart. I’m just so happy that it’s being told. For my mother, it’s a way of, in my head at least, putting her up on stage and saying, “You can do it. This one is yours.”
Matthew Lopez sets his play Somewhere in New York City at the close of the 1950s, an incredibly vibrant period in the city’s civic and artistic history. Theatrically, Broadway was enjoying the heyday of musical theatre. During 1959 and 1960, musical junkies like Lopez’s Candelaria family could see the original Broadway productions of My Fair Lady, Camelot, Gypsy, The Sound of Music, The Music Man and, of course, West Side Story.

But the Candelarias also have the misfortune of living on West 66th Street in an area of the city targeted by urban planner Robert Moses in his great restructuring of New York City. Moses was a controversial figure often credited (and blamed) for reworking the very fabric of New York over the course of the 20th century. Moses imagined a New York of highways, high-rises, soaring bridges and civic buildings, but his methods were cutthroat, and he had little interest in people’s day-to-day life on the ground. Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia once said of Moses, “No law, no regulation, no budget stops Bob Moses in his appointed task.”

In 1955, Robert Moses proposed a major redevelopment project designed to secure New York’s reputation as an international center of culture and the arts. The Lincoln Square Urban Renewal Project proposed the demolition of 14 blocks (almost 50 acres) of the West Side to build a new campus for Fordham University, a new headquarters for the American Red Cross and two middle-class housing towers. But the project’s centerpiece was to be Lincoln Center, a temple to the arts that would house the New York Philharmonic, the Metropolitan Opera and The Juilliard School.

As the head of New York City’s Committee on Slum Clearance, Moses took full advantage of the opportunities created by the Federal Housing Act of 1949. Moses designated the Lincoln Center site a slum and acquired the land through eminent domain in 1958, reselling it to his hand-picked project sponsors. Residents protested, especially with the loss of low-income housing, and a case was taken as far as the Supreme Court, but Moses’ vision was triumphant. Resident Aramis Gomez summed up the conflict when he said, “Who cares for the little shopkeeper so long as we have culture? Who cares whether we have a home as long as the Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera have one?” Moses responded to his critics by saying, “You can draw any kind of pictures you like on a clean slate, but when you operate in an overbuilt metropolis you have to hack your way with a meat ax.”

In 1958, the city began relocating over 16,000 residents and more than 600 businesses

“You cannot rebuild a city without moving people. You cannot make an omelet without breaking eggs.”

–Robert Moses, at the groundbreaking for Lincoln Center, 1959
from the project site. Like Matthew Lopez’s fictional Candelaria family, 24% of those displaced were Puerto Ricans, many of whom stayed in the condemned buildings as long as possible because they had no other options. Only 10% of the displaced residents made it into promised public housing. Many did not even apply because they would have been forced to relocate far from their original homes wherever the city could find room for them—like the Candelarias, who are moved to a housing project in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn.

Demolition began in August 1959, but not before the site had been targeted for another major cultural project: the filming of the movie version of the musical West Side Story, which had just closed on Broadway. The film was being co-directed by Robert Wise and choreographer Jerome Robbins, and shooting the prologue on location in New York was Wise’s idea. He slipped Lincoln Center contractors $5,000 to hold off demolition on 67th and 68th Streets so that in August 1960 the cast and crew of West Side Story could come to New York and shoot the opening of the film. The filmmakers not only used New Yorkers as extras, they even enlisted them as security guards. When rocks were thrown at the cast from the rooftops of nearby abandoned buildings, the studio hired a real local street gang to keep the set safe.

Stories of Robbins’ demanding behavior on the film set are legendary. He pushed the actors to the point of physical breakdown: their bodies exhausted in the August heat, their skin blistering from lying on hot concrete. He shot scenes over and over, trying to capture every angle, using cranes for overhead shots and digging trenches in the streets to capture foot-level views. The actors resorted to doing mock rain dances, hoping inclement weather would give them a break from shooting. Midway through the film, Robbins was fired from the project, and Wise completed West Side Story on his own. Robbins never directed another film. By the time West Side Story opened in 1961, the entire neighborhood captured on film in the prologue had been completely demolished.

Matthew Lopez’s Somewhere takes advantage of the powerful convergence of art, politics and personality that surrounded this West Side neighborhood in the late 1950s. At its heart, Somewhere is about the ties that bind mothers and their sons, families and their homes, artists and their art. Lopez blends humor and heartbreak to create a vivid snapshot of a family in conflict and a city in transition. The Candelarias are bound together by love and sacrifice just as their neighborhood is pulled apart by a vision of progress—progress in the shape of a wrecking ball.

The Whipping Man opened in New York earlier this year at Manhattan Theatre Club under the direction of Doug Hughes and starring Andre Braugher. Mr. Lopez was recently honored with the John Gassner Playwriting Award from the New York Outer Critics Circle for The Whipping Man. It has become one of the more regularly-produced new American plays this season with productions planned at over a dozen theatres across the country. He lives in Brooklyn with his partner, Brandon. Mr. Lopez owes a debt of gratitude to the generosity and wisdom of Lou Spisto, Jack DePalma, Jerry Patch and Caitlin Moon, all of whom were instrumental to this play’s development.

He was resident designer for Joffrey Ballet in New York City and was a scenic artist at The Metropolitan Opera for 15 seasons. He is an Associate Arts Professor at New York University’s Tisch School of the Arts, starting his 20th year teaching classes in theatre and film history, costume drawing and presentation and scenic painting, among others. Since then he directed more than 200 plays of all styles and periods and produced an additional 270 productions. During the 1940s, Mr. Noel served as dialogue director for the 20th Century Fox Studios and was the former director of the Ernie Pyle Theatre in Tokyo. Juan Javier Cardenas (Francisco)
For the way it blends political satire, pitch-black gallows humor, twisted history and an uncontrived rock ‘n’ roll musical score, I’ve got to go with Bloody Bloody Andrew Jackson.

Leo Ash Evens (Jamie)
West Side Story! The show has it all. What tops that score, book and dance all in one show?! It really made me love musical theatre and informed the kind of artist I want to be. I also have a love for Cabaret...dark and dirty.

Priscilla Lopez (Inez)
When my sister was graduating from junior high school, we all went to the movies to see this thing called The King and I. And, me being the tempestuous little thing I was, I was yelling, “I don’t want to go! I don’t want to go!” and throwing a tantrum and carrying on. But when I saw The King and I, I thought I was going to die. I just entered a world that I didn’t know could possibly exist. That was when I was bitten by the bug.

Benita Robledo (Rebecca)
When I was 17, I saw Hedwig and the Angry Inch with Kevin Calhoun at the Edinburgh Festival Fringe. I can’t think of a more perfect show to see at that stage in my life. It wasn’t polite. It was raw and beautiful and exhilarating. It bucked convention, and I loved that.

Jon Rua (Alejandro)
I would have to say the first musical that I was completely enamored with was The Phantom of the Opera. I saw it on a high school trip and then snatched the CD from my dad.

I would play the same parts of the same songs over and over; to this day when I hear the album the same energy resonates through me. I never thought I would be in a musical, but for some reason, listening to that album made me feel like I was in my own musical.

Matthew Lopez (Playwright)
When I was a kid, my parents took me to see Tyne Daly in Gypsy and it blew my mind. It was the first time I had the experience of being pinned to my seat by a performance, by a show. I couldn’t breathe. I don’t think I blinked once and I certainly didn’t want it to ever end. By the time we got to “Rose’s Turn,” I was just putty. Gypsy is about as flawless a musical as you can get. It proves you can deliver the goods but not skimp on character and depth. It’s thrilling, funny and heartbreaking. In short, it’s theatre.

Giovanna Sardelli (Director)
I grew up in Las Vegas (pre-Cirque) and spent every Saturday watching musicals. Fred Astaire was my first crush. I loved Silk Stockings, Top Hat - all things Fred! I had posters of him in my room through high school. But the most influential musical was A Chorus Line. I listened to that album, and my two sisters and I tortured my poor mother by singing “At the Ballet” whenever we were in the car. The national tour came to Vegas and Philip Riccobuono played Paul. Phil had gone to high school with my older sister, and I had seen him perform since I was in elementary school. Seeing him in this huge musical was incredible! This was the moment I realized I could leave Las Vegas, move to New York and make theatre.

The Old Globe’s community partnerships are an integral part of our mission and provide an environment for the growth and education of students, theatre professionals, audiences and the community at large. Our partnerships with San Diego schools bring thousands of young people through our doors each year, while the schools benefit from a variety of enrichment activities that supplement their student curriculum.

In June 2011 the San Diego Unified School District recognized the 20-year partnership between The Old Globe and the San Diego School for the Creative and Performing Arts (SCPA). Many of the cast members of our Summer Shakespeare Intensive are SCPA students, and 15 students were cast in our upcoming production of Odyssey after an audition process that left director Lear de Bessonet astonished at the talent pool at the school.

Current active Old Globe partner schools include San Diego School for the Creative and Performing Arts, Freese Elementary, Valencia Park Elementary and Lincoln High School.

We are proud of the community relationships we have built and continue to develop, and we applaud our partner schools for recognizing the value of theatre in the lives of their students.

For more information about our education programs please visit our website at www.TheOldGlobe.org or contact our Education Department at GlobeLearning@TheOldGlobe.org.

What is the Craig Noel League?
Founded in 2000 and named for the Globe’s Founding Director, the League is a planned giving society for the Globe comprised of individuals who have included The Old Globe in their estate plans. Through their generosity, these supporters of the Theatre are helping to ensure a long and bright future for San Diego’s leading cultural landmark.

What is a Planned Gift?
Planned giving is simply a way to support The Old Globe through your estate plans by establishing an irrevocable bequest of property, stock or cash; a charitable trust; a living estate; or some other deferred giving instrument. In your estate plans, you have the ability to designate the specific use of the funds given to the Globe, and to help guide your decision, The Old Globe Board of Directors has established specific giving areas that you may choose from, including classical theatre and Shakespeare, education programs and new works.

How do I make a Planned Gift?
Simply call the Globe and schedule an appointment for a confidential meeting, or visit with your estate planner or attorney. You may also attend one of several seminars held throughout the year to become more acquainted with estate planning.

How can a Planned Gift help me?
A planned gift can reduce your income tax, increase your yearly income, help you avoid capital gains tax, distribute your assets to family members at a reduced tax rate and, most importantly, support an organization you love! You will also have the satisfaction of knowing your gift will impact generations of future theatregoers and that The Old Globe will remain a leader in the theatre arts for decades to come!

To become a member of the Craig Noel League or to tell us of a gift you have already made, please contact Bridget Cantu Wear, Associate Director of Development, Planned Giving, at (619) 231-1941 x2312 or bcantuwear@TheOldGlobe.org.

Join us and become a part of our active community with a variety of exciting events including an Annual Member Event, “Food for Thought” monthly lunches where you can meet a Globe artist or one of the many Opening Night receptions held throughout the year.
Associate Artists of The Old Globe

In recognition of their unique contribution to the growth of The Old Globe and their special talent, we take great pride and pleasure in acknowledging as Associate Artists the following individuals who have repeatedly demonstrated by their active presence on our stages and in our shops, that wherever else they may work, they remain the heart and soul of the Globe.
