THE BROTHERS SIZE
Welcome to THE OLD GLOBE

It’s official: Barry Edelstein has arrived! As of January 1, The Old Globe and San Diego’s theatre community have a new artistic voice. With Barry’s arrival, the Globe completes its transition to a dual-leadership structure, the model in place at most regional theatres, with Barry serving as Artistic Director and Michael G. Murphy as Managing Director.

In this time of great energy and excitement, we are implementing our leadership transition plan, which will help Barry become acquainted with his new hometown and give him the opportunity to get to know the many constituencies of The Old Globe. Over the next few months, Barry will be meeting with Globe artists, staff, Board members, volunteers, donors and others.

As The Brothers Size and Pygmalion begin performances, we look forward to the opportunity to introduce Barry to the Globe’s most important constituency: you, our audience. On page 9 of this program you will find a special note from Barry about The Brothers Size. Look for this ongoing feature for each of our future productions. We hope it gives you some insight into the artistic significance of the work on our stages and deepens your theatregoing experience.

This production of The Brothers Size marks the San Diego debut of Tea Alagic, an extraordinary director and longtime collaborator of playwright Tarell Alvin McCraney. Remember those two names — they are theatre artists to watch, and we are proud to welcome them to the Globe.

We look forward to seeing you at the theatre! Don’t be shy — introduce yourself. We’re eager to hear your thoughts about the Globe as we open this exciting new chapter in its story.

Mission Statement
The mission of The Old Globe is to preserve, strengthen, and advance American theatre by: Creating theatrical experiences of the highest professional standards; Producing and presenting works of exceptional merit, designed to reach current and future audiences; Ensuring diversity and balance in programming; Providing an environment for the growth and education of theatre professionals, audiences and the community at large.
Happy New Year and welcome to The Old Globe!

Thank you for joining us for The Brothers Size, set on a Louisiana Bayou, a powerful family tale of freedom, desire and the strength of the human heart told through West African mythology.

As Chair of The Old Globe Board, I am proud to support one of the region’s largest and most respected not-for-profit performing arts organizations, and I am grateful to those of you who do the same. Your loyal attendance is gratifying evidence of the broad appeal of the Globe, and we work very hard to have a positive impact on you and our entire community.

Just as important as your attendance, your charitable gifts and volunteer activity are the fuel that drives our institution. Individuals like you are the foundation of the Globe’s annual fund income, which represents 64% of our contributed income. We thank you for your interest and hope that you’ll not only support the Globe with your own annual contribution but that you’ll also serve as an ambassador, bringing friends with you every time you attend.

On behalf of the Board of Directors, thank you for making the Globe a part of your life.

Enjoy the performance!

The Old Globe Board of Directors recently announced the appointment of Barry Edelstein as Artistic Director. A nationally recognized director, producer, author and educator, Barry will work together with Managing Director Michael G. Murphy to lead San Diego’s flagship arts institution.

Barry was most recently the Director of the Shakespeare Initiative at New York City’s Public Theater. In this capacity he oversaw all of the company’s Shakespearean productions, including its famous Shakespeare in the Park series in Central Park, as well as The Public’s extensive educational, community outreach and artist-training programs. He was Associate Producer of The Public’s recent Broadway production of The Merchant of Venice starring Al Pacino. Other productions he supervised there were As You Like It and All’s Well That Ends Well directed by Daniel Sullivan, King Lear with Sam Waterston and Bill Irwin, Measure for Measure directed by David Esbjornson, The Winter’s Tale directed by Michael Greif, Twelfth Night with Anne Hathaway, Othello with Philip Seymour Hoffman and Hamlet with Michael Stuhlbarg. He supervised the addition of Shakespeare to The Public’s Public LAB small-scale producing series with his own production of Timon of Athens with Richard Thomas in the title role, and he supervised Love’s Labour’s Lost, Titus Andronicus and the upcoming Troilus and Cressida in that series. He launched The Public’s Mobile Unit tour to prisons, homeless shelters and other underserved audiences with Measure for Measure and Richard III. This body of work led NPR to call Barry “one of the country’s leading Shakespeareans.”

From 1998-2003 Barry was Artistic Director of Off Broadway’s Classic Stage Company, where he directed Richard III starring John Turturro and Julianna Margulies and The Winter’s Tale starring David Strathairn. He also staged the world premiere of Steve Martin’s The Underpants, which he commissioned, Ben Jonson’s The Alchemist and Molière’s The Misanthrope starring Uma Thurman in her stage debut. At Williamstown Theatre Festival, he directed As You Like It starring Gwyneth Paltrow. His other New York credits include Arthur Miller’s All My Sons (which won the Lucille Lortel Award for Best Revival) and, at The Public, Steve Martin’s Wasp and Other Plays, Julius Caesar starring Jeffrey Wright for Shakespeare in the Park and The Merchant of Venice featuring Ron Leibman’s Obie Award-winning portrayal of Shylock.

He has also directed many contemporary and classic plays at leading regional theatres. His first film, My Lunch with Larry, starring Lisa Edelstein (no relation) and Greg Germann, played the festival circuit in 2006 and 2007.

Most recently in New York he directed the premiere of novelist Nathan Englander’s first play, The Twenty-Seventh Man, at The Public.

Barry’s book Bardisms: Shakespeare for all Occasions “instructs and entertains” (New York Post) and was re-released in paperback in 2010. His book Thinking Shakespeare (called by New York magazine “a must-read for actors”) is the standard text on American Shakespearean acting.

Barry has taught at The Juilliard School, New York University’s Graduate Acting Program, Yale School of Drama and University of Southern California. He has lectured on theatre around the USA and the world and has written on the subject for The New York Times, The Washington Post, The New Republic and American Theatre. He is a graduate of Oxford University where he studied as a Rhodes Scholar. He and his wife, Hilit, have two children, Tillirose and August.
The two of you worked together on the very first productions of The Brothers Size. Tea, what drew you back to the play to work on it again? Tarell, what makes Tea a good director for this piece?

TEA: I love this play. I loved it from the first day I read it in 2006, and I love the fact that we created it together. It’s like our baby. Tarell and I know each other well, we know each other’s work and we know each other’s aesthetics. It also helps that we were both actors and dancers before we became what we are today, since a profound concern for voice, movement and body strongly influences our work.

TARELL: The things that made Tea a great person to work on my first professional play back in that small room in New Haven are the same things that make it lucky for us that she’s returning to it. She’s incredibly smart, not just in terms of intellect and theatrical knowledge but also in her intuition and ability to understand the emotional weight of a piece. You want a director with that kind of fearless curiosity and tenacity in the room.

How would you describe the style of The Brothers Size? Why does the story need to be told in this way?

TARELL: The Brothers Size is a fable and is told in this manner in order for it to be passed on. It doesn’t have to be told in this way, but this play takes this form (three actors in a room handing the story to you, sometimes directly, other times not) so that you feel as if you’ve shared the experience or been there and have the right and ability to share it, pass it on, yourself. You own it more.

TEA: The production arose, in part, out of restrictions — when I first directed the piece I had to not only direct it but also design it, everything from sets to lights to costumes. On the one hand, our resources were limited and demanded an approach to the text that was feasible within these practical limitations. On the other hand, its many allusions posed a challenge to the reader or viewer, whose familiarity with the figures Tarell weaves into his work is restricted. But I also asked, “What is universal about this play?” I come from Bosnia; I know very little about African American history, aside from the bits and pieces I gathered while attending Yale and living in the U.S. So it became of personal importance for me to find out how this production could be universal to every country, every place in the world, no matter what color or race people are. The most productive question, though, turned out to be the most specific one: When I first read the play, I asked Tarell, “What are these names? I’ve never heard of these names: Oshoosi, Ogun, Elegba.” And he said, “Oh, I just took them from Yoruba.” So I thought, “OK, we can actually put this more into the world of Yoruba gods and ritualistic concepts.” Rather than seeking more general terms in which to understand the play, it was the intensification of the specific tone and world that made it resonate and become accessible. I went back to the way the Yoruba in Nigeria talk to each other through drumming. That’s a sort of conversation they have village to village. And it is also how they perform on the open ground – they create a space to perform in and for people to come in and watch. That was part of my inspiration.

How did music become such a vivid part of the play? How does music and language come together in the performance of the piece?

TARELL: Music and the words were always intertwined. The words were placed on the page in rhythms and when said correctly they erect a kind of song. The music, the language, the bodies all come together to aid us in delivering the story to the audience.

TEA: When I first directed the play, I didn’t know we were going to include drumming. In rehearsal, we started highlighting beats. Tarell doesn’t explicitly mark all pauses in his stage directions but there are still changes or beats. In a naturalistic drama, these beats are psychological, but I thought, let’s accentuate them even more, make them physically palpable and show them with the beats of the drums. In rehearsal we had the actor playing Elegba playing the drum, doing those beats, and then they gradually became a score.

The play includes a lot of strong language, including the “n-word.” Do you see the word as controversial? Why do you feel the characters speak the way they do?

TARELL: All language is strong and can be controversial. The words used in this play are a part of the lives of the men we are depicting. I would only worry if they were an untrue color or pigment of that portrait.

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

Once a decade, perhaps even less frequently, the American theatre produces a new voice that changes its future course. David Mamet’s was that voice when it was first heard in the 1970s, for example. Its scabrous, staccato bursts charted the bobs and weaves of American confidence men and charlatans on the make. Tony Kushner’s voice came in the 80’s. Full of dense argument, fueled by moral indignation and leavened with acid irony, his arch cadences made his work a cosmopolitan, American answer to George Bernard Shaw.

Tonight you will hear the voice that will define the American theatre of the 2010s: that of Tarell Alvin McCraney. McCraney’s raw material is the music of urban African America. Percussive and jazzy one moment, slow and insinuating the next, it sweeps through breathtakingly sharp turns from a kind of profane poetry to a shockingly sacred street-talk. A character whose vocabulary comprises a mumble of monosyllabic curses in one moment suddenly waxes hyper-articulate enough to narrate his own stage directions in description of his inner world. It’s theatre as contact-sport; playwriting as virtuoso musicianship.

While McCraney’s idiosyncratic voice is entirely unique, his themes are anything but. He is the rare young writer who embraces the old as much as the new. Myths and classic tales — not solely from the Western tradition — are McCraney’s source material. His stories are new narratives forged in the molds of ancient forms.

Tonight’s play, The Brothers Size, is the work that proclaimed McCraney’s arrival on the scene, and in it is everything that makes this writer so special. The relationship between Ogun and Oshoosi Size is at once deeply, indeed painfully, intimate, and yet also primal, even mythic. Their fraternal bond is so rich, so multilayered, that it recalls the great, epic brotherly loves whose stories are central to our culture: those of Cain and Abel, and Jacob and Esau, and Romulus and Remus. But the play’s locale is very much the here and now: a greasy auto shop on the outskirts of town. And its preoccupations are solidly of today: how a man finds his identity in the roiling, riven culture of urban America, with its prejudices and pressures closing in from every direction. And most striking of all, its heart is — refreshingly — irony-free: as deeply felt and unselfconsciously open as can be.

Like most truly original talents, McCraney simultaneously breaks from and echoes the work of his predecessors. Listen closely tonight and you’ll hear, bubbling beneath McCraney’s play, not only the American world outside the theatre’s doors, but also the American playwrights who paved his way. Mamet’s here, with his hustlers; Kushner too, with his moralists. August Wilson’s earnest chroniclers of African American life are in this play, as are the carnivalesques of the great African American playwrights Adrienne Kennedy and George C. Wolfe. I sometimes think that if the Pulitzer-prized stage giants Arthur Miller and Suzan-Lori Parks had a kid, he’d be a lot like Tarell McCraney. Where this extraordinary talent will take us next is one of the most exciting prospects in the American theatre — and in American culture, too. I can’t wait to find out and to make sure The Old Globe is there for all the fun.

Thanks for being here. Enjoy the show!

YORUBA MYTHOLOGY
Orishas and Their Meaning

BY DANIELLE MAGES AMATO

The Brothers Size, says playwright Tarell Alvin McCraney, was “inspired by Yoruba life and traditions, steeped in Southern rhythms and cadences and seamed shut with the fire of urban music and dance.” Today, there are more than 20 million Yoruba, living mostly in the West African countries of Nigeria, Benin and Ghana. The Yoruba worship a creator god, Olodumare, and a rich pantheon of other deities, called orishas, that represent different aspects of nature or the spirit. Each of the characters in The Brothers Size is named for a different Yoruba orisha, and their personalities are strongly influenced by that orisha.
OGUN
The orisha of iron, fire and war. Ogun is the patron of blacksmiths and the deity of all metalwork and metalworkers. He is often pictured with an iron tool or sword in his hand. In The Brothers Size, Ogun owns a garage and works wonders with cars. He is steady and solid, but he can also seem hard and unyielding to his brother Oshoosi.

OSHOOSI
The orisha of the forest, the hunter, the wanderer. Oshoosi is often portrayed as a loner, a stranger, a solo traveler into strange realms. In The Brothers Size, Oshoosi is newly returned from a journey to prison, and he is struggling with how to live on the outside. He does not seem to have a clear path in life, and his brother berates him for his lack of direction.

ELEGBA
The trickster, the teacher of difficult lessons. Elegba is the orisha of the crossroads and patron of travelers who holds power over fortune and misfortune. In many legends, Elegba plays tricks on unsuspecting humans in order to put them on the path to maturity. In The Brothers Size, Elegba is Oshoosi’s friend from prison, who shows up on the Size doorstep at this major crossroads moment in Oshoosi’s life. Elegba’s presence causes discord between the brothers, as Elegba seems to be tempting Oshoosi to take risks that could put him back in prison.

YORUBA IN THE UNITED STATES
Yoruba culture and mythology made their way to the Americas during the years of the Atlantic slave trade. Many Yoruba were brought to Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and the Caribbean and from there made their way to the United States, especially to Florida and the other Gulf Coast states. The Yoruba beliefs combined with indigenous traditions and Christian teachings to form belief systems like today’s Santería, Vodun and Oyotunji.

McCrane emphasized that his use of the Yoruba mythology is a specifically American vision. “You can trace the myths to Africa,” he says, “but that’s not how I learned them. The orisha stories I learned are American myths, not West African stories.”

“Yoruba culture and mythology made their way to the Americas during the years of the Atlantic slave trade. Many Yoruba were brought to Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and the Caribbean and from there made their way to the United States, especially to Florida and the other Gulf Coast states. The Yoruba beliefs combined with indigenous traditions and Christian teachings to form belief systems like today’s Santería, Vodun and Oyotunji. For McCraney, growing up in Miami, this rich mixture of traditions was part of what it meant to be African American. “From a young age,” he has said, “I found myself running into people – Lucumi, Santero – in Miami who would tell me that I am a child of Yemoja or that the deities speak to me strongly...the Yoruba have been with me, around me – even when I didn’t know it.” Many African American, Afro Cuban and Afro Caribbean artists have been inspired by traditional Yoruba stories and practices. Painter Jean-Michel Basquiat, whose father was Haitian, frequently included images of Ogun and Elegba in his art, combining them with Catholic saints and American figures like Charlie Parker and Joe Lewis. In a 2009 interview with American Theatre magazine, Painter Jean-Michel Basquiat, whose father was Haitian, frequently included images of Ogun and Elegba in his art, combining them with Catholic saints and American figures like Charlie Parker and Joe Lewis. In a 2009 interview with American Theatre magazine,
The play is dedicated to “my brothers.” What does the question of brotherhood in the play mean to each of you?

TARELL: (Laughing) I spend about 90 pages telling you what brotherhood means, can mean, might mean, should mean to me, so I’ll let Tea take this one.

TEA: As much as Tarell uses poetic language and the style is abstract, the story is so truthful and so honest and the brother relationship is extraordinarily well portrayed. I have tears when I’m watching it. It’s at once very funny and very tragic. You can see how much sacrifice this older brother is prepared to make for his younger brother, and that’s a universal story. I connect it to my own family. In 1992, I had a war in my country, and I had to leave my country in 10 minutes, because bombs were coming into the city and destroying everything. And my parents said, “Take this bag and run.” And they told me, “We’re going to see each other in two weeks.” And we didn’t see each other until many, many years after that. The play tells us a story of unconditional love; it’s a family story, and everyone can relate to that.

SUMMER SHAKESPEARE INTENSIVE

For high school-aged students, our Education Department offers two top-notch programs that provide training and scholarships toward a future in the theatre.

High school students looking for an opportunity to study classical acting and perform in The Old Globe’s Lowell Davies Festival Theatre can audition for the SUMMER SHAKESPEARE INTENSIVE. This four-week program immerses participants in deep study of one of Shakespeare’s plays and gives students a professional-level experience as they rehearse their show. Students work with the Globe’s stage managers and costume, props and scenic departments in an exhilarating theatre experience.

Here’s what former students have to say about the Summer Shakespeare Intensive!

“The hardest fun you could ever have.” ~ Mico Ramos

“A wonderfully empowering program that not only increased my confidence in my acting skills, but my confidence in myself.” ~ Meghan McKenzie

“This is the best program I have ever done. I have been to a lot of workshops and done a lot of camps, but the Intensive is by far the best one. I learned a million different things, and everyone who taught the program was professional and insightful.” ~ Kelly Prendergast

“I had an amazing time in the Shakespeare Intensive. Everything was done at a very professional level while still keeping a sense of fun and enjoying theatre.” ~ Darl Clausen

Auditions for the Summer Shakespeare Intensive will take place on March 9 and 10, 2013.

GLOBE HONORS is a competition for San Diego County students who have worked on plays and musicals at their schools and in the community. The competition consists of auditions for actors and singers and an interview process for technical theatre students.

Winners of the semi-finals move on to the finals round where they perform their audition pieces onstage in The Old Globe Theatre. All winners receive $1,000 scholarships.

Auditions for Globe Honors will be held on May 4 and 5, 2013.

Associate Artists of The Old Globe

In recognition of their unique contribution to the growth of The Old Globe and their special talent, we take great pride and pleasure in acknowledging as Associate Artists the following individuals who have repeatedly demonstrated by their active presence on our stages and in our shops, that wherever else they may work, they remain the heart and soul of the Globe.

For the convenience of our hard of hearing and hearing-impaired patrons, The Old Globe has an Assistive Listening System in all three theatres: the Sheryl and Harvey White Theatre, the Old Globe Theatre and the Lowell Davies Festival Theatre. A limited number of the lightweight headsets, as well as induction neck loops, may be obtained from the house manager prior to performances.

Go behind the scenes at The Old Globe to learn about the history, three stages, shop and craft areas. Open tours: most Saturdays and Sundays at 10:30am. Groups by reservation. $5 adults; $3 seniors and students. Phone (619) 238-0043 x2145 for information/reservations.

LOST AND FOUND
If you have misplaced a personal item while at the theatre, please contact the Ticket Services Office or Security as soon as possible. If we are unable to locate your item, we’ll happily take down your contact information and a description of the item and contact you if it is found. The Old Globe does not assume liability for items left behind on the premises.
