THE RAINMAKER
Welcome to THE OLD GLOBE

N. Richard Nash may have penned The Rainmaker nearly 60 years ago, but director Maria Mileaf’s production does not turn back the clock. Instead, she offers us a fresh look at an American classic, reminding us that love and longing, dreams and self-discovery are as timeless as rain. This production marks Maria’s Globe debut, and we are delighted to welcome her here for the first time. She is joined by an exceptional design team, including scenic designer Neil Patel, costume designer Katherine Roth, lighting designer Japhy Weideman and sound designer Bart Fasbender.

The Old Globe’s campus truly comes to life in the summer. Productions run simultaneously on all three of our stages, and the plaza bustles with pre-show excitement. In the Lowell Davies Festival Theatre, the 2013 Shakespeare Festival is already underway, featuring productions of Shakespeare’s The Merchant of Venice and A Midsummer Night’s Dream, along with Tom Stoppard’s Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead. Despite the prominence of the Summer Shakespeare Festival, our indoor venues are by no means in its shadow. In addition to The Rainmaker, the Globe’s summer season includes a sexy, stylish adaptation of the noir classic Double Indemnity. This is a truly remarkable group of productions, and we hope you will have the chance to see them all.

We also look forward to having you back this fall for the start of our 2013-2014 season! With two sensational new musicals, three award-winning plays about contemporary life by thrilling young American voices, a tour-de-force by an American comedic master, a poetic classic by a 20th century giant, and the return of Shakespeare to the indoor stage, this remarkable and wide-ranging lineup of productions stays true to the Globe’s storied reputation even as it edges the company forward in some exciting new directions.

Enjoy the show!

Mission Statement

The mission of The Old Globe is to preserve, strengthen, and advance American theatre by:

Creating theatrical experiences of the highest professional standards; Producing and presenting works of exceptional merit, designed to reach current and future audiences; Ensuring diversity and balance in programming; Providing an environment for the growth and education of theatre professionals, audiences and the community at large.
Welcome to The Old Globe’s production of the classic romantic comedy The Rainmaker, where you’ll learn whether Starbuck is the key to everything Lizzie desires, or just another traveling salesman filled with promises of bringing rain.

Whatever the outcome on the stage, we already know that our Production Sponsors shower us with support. These generous and noble individuals and institutions make a critical difference to the Globe’s work all year long.

For their sponsorship of The Rainmaker, we thank Peter Cooper and Norman Blachford and California Bank & Trust, stalwart leaders in our community who understand that the Globe’s ticket sales cover only 55% of our costs.

We ask you to consider joining our family of donors as Members at $50, Circle Patrons at $2,500 or at any level you can afford. Just as important is your help in spreading the word of the Globe’s mission among your colleagues, friends and family. Bring others with you the next time you come so that they, too, can learn why The Old Globe has led San Diego to its place as, in the words of Artistic Director Barry Edelstein, “a big famous deal” in the national and international theatre world.

Thank you for all you do for the Globe.

Peter Cooper and Norman Blachford

Peter and Norman are longtime supporters of The Old Globe and are well known for their major philanthropic activities and community activism. Norman serves on the Board of the Mingei International Museum and is on the Founders Council of the Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law. A native of Montreal, Norman founded a manufacturing firm that produces noise control materials for the transportation industry and many international corporations. In 1981, Norman and Louis Stankiewicz were awarded a Technical Achievement Award (stage operations) by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Peter, now a retired businessman, is a member of the Globe’s Board of Directors, chairs the Education Committee and also serves on the Executive Committee. He is also a Founding Council member of the Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law and is on the Board of the Fishman Fund at the Sanford Burnham Institute.

For more than two decades, California Bank & Trust (CB&T) has been a generous supporter of The Old Globe. This summer, the Globe is pleased to announce the Bank’s additional 2013 sponsorship of The Rainmaker. CB&T has consistently provided both volunteer and financial contributions to the Globe over the years, including service on the Board of Directors through the leadership of CB&T’s Senior Vice President Sandra Redman, who was instrumental in the Bank’s generous support of the Globe’s Securing a San Diego Landmark Capital and Endowment Campaign. Their previous sponsorships include such plays as Floyd Collins, Henry V, Pericles, Julius Caesar, Antony and Cleopatra, The Lady with all the Answers, Boeing-Boeing, God of Carnage and, most recently, A Gentleman’s Guide to Love and Murder, which has announced a Broadway opening for November 2013. The Old Globe is truly grateful to California Bank & Trust for its unwavering support, generosity and commitment to the arts.

The Rainmaker is Dedicated to the Memory of Forrest N. Shumway
March 21, 1927 – December 4, 2012

A life-long passionate advocate and patron of theatre, opera and the arts, Forrest N. Shumway was a regular theatregoer in San Diego for more than three decades and served on boards around the country for numerous arts and education institutions. When he moved Signal Companies from Los Angeles to San Diego in 1980, it was one of the first major companies to establish corporate headquarters in this region. He was deeply committed to the arts and encouraged employees at Signal Companies to become active arts supporters. His vision for creating a lively and robust arts scene resonated throughout the business community, and his leadership prompted other civic leaders to invest in San Diego’s not-for-profit institutions. He and his wife Patsy, who served on The Old Globe Board of Directors for many years, have served as generous sponsors and annual fund donors, acting as Globe Production Sponsors and Season Sponsors since the early 1980s. Forrest and Patsy were generous donors to the Globe’s Advancement Campaign in 1992, which built new administrative offices and rehearsal halls. The Old Globe is honored that Forrest N. Shumway was a member of its extended family for so many years and is grateful for his Renaissance approach to support of the arts. He will always be fondly remembered for his friendship and abiding affection for The Old Globe and for all of San Diego.
The Rainmaker is presented by special arrangement with Samuel French, Inc.

When drought hits the lush grasslands of the richly fertile west, they are green no more and the dying is a palpable thing. What happens to verdure and vegetation, to cattle and livestock can be read in the coldly statistical little bulletins freely issued by the Department of Agriculture. What happens to the people of the west — beyond the calculable and terrible phenomena of sudden poverty and loss of substance — is an incalculable and febrile kind of desperation. Rain will never come again; the earth will be sere forever; and in all of heaven, there is no promise of remedy.

Yet, men of wisdom like H. C. Curry know to be patient with heaven. They know that the earth will not thirst forever; they know that one day they will again awaken to a green morning. Young people like Lizzie, his daughter, cannot know this as certainly as he does. Bright as she is, she cannot know. She can only count the shooting stars, and hope.

The play is set in such a drought-beset region in the moment when Lizzie’s hope is faltering. Because the hopes of Lizzie and H. C., of Jim and Starbuck and File are finally brought to blessing, because the people of the play are deserving and filled with love of one another — and most important, because it is not always that the hopes of deserving, loving human beings are blessed — this play is a comedy and it is a romance.

—N. Richard Nash
The Rainmaker is the first production on the Donald and Darlene Shiley Stage in The Old Globe’s 2013 Summer Season, and I am as excited to share it with you as I am proud of the remarkable year of work that preceded it. When I was appointed Artistic Director, Allegiance – A New American Musical was in this house; its commercial backers just weeks ago announced that it is on route to Broadway. Dr. Seuss’ How the Grinch Stole Christmas! was next, and the Globe scheduled a special and very important performance that shared this beloved San Diego holiday tradition with an audience that hadn’t had a chance to see it; families with children on the Autism spectrum. The New Year brought me and my family to San Diego and Shaw back to the Globe in Associate Artist Nicholas Martin’s delightful production of Pygmalion, and then another old friend, Darko Tresnjak, returned with the sparkling musical A Gentleman’s Guide to Love and Murder—also now bound for Broadway. Other Desert Cities, the latest work from the pen of Jon Robin Baitz, one of America’s leading playwrights, set a provocative story of the intersection between private affairs and public events against a southern California backdrop. As all this extraordinary theater unfolded in this room, next door on the Sheryl and Harvey White stage another list of fine productions held sway: God of Carnage, Good People, The Brothers Size, A Doll’s House, and Be a Good Little Widow.

Reviewing these titles I am struck by a major theme and a minor one. The major one is the sheer eclecticism of The Old Globe’s programming. There truly is something here for every taste, and the range of periods, styles, genres, and even stories and characters, is as wide as can be found at any theater in North America. And for me, still the new guy at just over six months in, this breadth of material is a testament less to the Globe’s programming acumen than to San Diego’s sophistication. I don’t mean to flatter when I say that outside the half-dozen cities that are the world’s great theater capitals, I would be hard pressed to name another metropolis with a large and loyal audience for a program as broad as ours (and that’s not to mention the breadth of theater that’s available in dozens of other institutional theaters around San Diego). That this audience is here is a reminder to me—although I rarely need one—that I really am fortunate to be in the position I am.

The minor theme that emerges from our past season is that a majority of the stories the Globe told this year were focused on women. Allegiance was driven by a strong female protagonist; Pygmalion is of course Shaw’s great proto-feminist play; A Doll’s House is the feminist ur-text of the modern theater; both Good People and Other Desert Cities boast female roles that the major actresses on the American stage rejoice in playing; and Be a Good Little Widow is nothing if not a revelatory exploration of two generations of the American female experience. Widow was written by a woman, as was Carnage; Doll’s House and Brothers Size were directed by women.

And that brings me to The Rainmaker. This mid-century American classic was ahead of its time in its sympathetic view of a young woman’s search for self in the context of an overwhelmingly patriarchal culture. Lizzie Curry’s self-discovery may not be the stuff of the countercultural explosion that swept the country a decade after this play’s Broadway premiere, but her core conviction is no less powerful: that the vast expanses of the American west must hold a promise for her as full as that it offers her brothers, and that hers are the terms that matter more than her family’s or her town’s as she decides whether to love, and whom. Thinking about a director for this play I knew that I wanted to find an artist who would illuminate Lizzie and her world in ways I’d not seen in previous productions, and I am thrilled at all the richness that my friend and colleague Maria Mileaf has found in every scene. Maria’s visual sense complements her interpretive powers, and I think you will agree that she and her collaborators have found the beating heart in a play that deserves its place in the pantheon of American classics.

In 1937—coincidentally not long after the time chronicled in The Rainmaker—The Old Globe produced its first non-Shakespearean play. It was called The Distaff Side. The title is a now-antiquated phrase that refers to all things female. The distinguished female playwrights and directors who will feature in our 2013-2014 season and the women-centered stories they will tell attest that these many decades later, the distaff side remains very much on this theater’s mind.

Enjoy the show.

Barry Edelstein
What drew you to The Rainmaker? What made this a project you wanted to direct?

When Old Globe Artistic Director Barry Edelstein suggested The Rainmaker to me, I sat down with the script, and I discovered that it’s a page-turner. I'd never seen or read it before, and I hadn't seen the movie. I had a really strong emotional reaction to the play — I found it compelling, engaging, refreshing. I loved the story, and I loved the characters. And I love the challenge of bringing older plays to life.

What kind of challenges do you think the play presents?

Any time you do a play, there are three time periods at work: when it’s set, when it was written and today — when a group of artists comes together to make a new production for an audience. The challenge is how to place the story in its original time period, acknowledge the issues raised by the period in which it was written and then still keep it alive for an audience today, with their contemporary sensibilities and expectations. In other words, we want to give the play new life while still respecting the heart of the original and the intentions of the writer.

The Rainmaker is set in the 1930s on a ranch somewhere in the West. It takes place right before the Dust Bowl, but the family in the play is wealthy; they’re not poor farmers like the Okies in John Steinbeck’s The Grapes of Wrath. They’re dying in a drought, literally; their cattle are dying, and the characters are worried about their workers and their ranch. We wanted to capture some of that 1930s world in the design: the iconic images of the West, the dryness and the sky. We needed a sense of that place and time — the wealthy ranch house with its verandas and outbuildings and barns — but we didn’t want to burden the audience with pounds and pounds of scenery. I think what scenic designer Neil Patel came up with is very evocative — very beautiful and deceptively simple. And I’m lucky to be working with a fantastic design team. Lighting designer Japhy Weideman has created an amazingly lit sky that is so important to the visual world. Katherine Roth has imagined clothing that places the characters in the ’30s while underscoring their personalities in a fresh way. And Bart Fasbender has located a musical universe. For all of us, the challenge is to bring the world of the 1930s to life without suffocating that world in a museum panorama from another decade.

Even though it’s set in the 1930s, the politics and the family dynamics of the play are very much of the 1950s, when the play was written. The main character, Lizzie, is 27, and she’s very fearful of becoming a “spinster” or an “old maid” — those are the words they use in the play. In 2013, we don’t think that a woman’s sole destiny is to be a wife and mother. We don’t think that’s the only way — or even the best way — for a woman to find fulfillment. However, Lizzie’s dreams — finding love, starting a family, searching for a soulmate — I think they still resonate for us today. And Lizzie is very articulate about what she wants — and how she wants it. She’s not like the other women in town, and she doesn’t want to be like them. She’s strong; she’s smart. She’s capable, and even though she longs for love, she isn’t willing to put on some kind of act, pretend to be something she’s not, to get what she wants. She’s standing by her own sense of authentic self, and that to me feels very contemporary. I’m thrilled that Danielle Skraastad is working with me on this production to bring Lizzie to life.
It’s interesting that Lizzie is the only female character in the play, the only woman in this world of men.

But the offstage characters are so specific. You almost think you see them. If we do our job well, people will know what Jim’s girlfriend looks like and what the girls down the road look like. Playwright N. Richard Nash really gives you a sense of the world offstage. And Lizzie also imitates those women, so you have that trick where you think you’re seeing them. The one person they never talk about is the mother. The absent mother — that’s a common trope in a lot of fairy tales. To me, this whole play is like a great fairy tale: Lizzie is a motherless child on an adventure toward growing up and coming into herself.

Are there particular aspects of the play you wanted to explore in this production?

The family relationships in the Curry family are stunningly beautiful. The bond between the father and his children, the relationship between Lizzie and her brothers — that’s what’s timelessly interesting. And I think the father-daughter relationship, the striking dynamic between H. C. and Lizzie, is absolutely central to the play, and it’s key to understanding how the story works.

Then you have the love triangle: the girl torn between this local guy she has a secret crush on and the sexy stranger who comes into town and blows her world apart. I wanted to make that dynamic really compelling. And when it came to Starbuck — I mean, listen to his name, “Starbuck” — I wanted to find an actor who could be smart and sexy and dangerous and inappropriate, and who was able to make you believe in that character’s fascinating history. I saw a lot of great actors in the audition process, but Gbenga Akinnagbe was the first person who came into the room and gave me not only what I was looking for in Starbuck but more than I even imagined.

I was looking for a company of actors who could bring all the characters’ dreams and relationships to life in an astonishing and dynamic yet completely honest way. I wanted their love and struggles and fears and hopes to be palpable. I’m looking forward to creating the universe of The Rainmaker with this group of artists on the remarkable stage of the Old Globe!

Interview by Danielle Mages Amato
The Hopi had their rain dances; the medieval Europeans rang church bells. In the 1800s and early 1900s, the American West produced a bumper crop of rainmakers: men determined to coax storms from an unforgiving sky.

Some rainmakers operated under the aegis of science, with great public support. In the mid-1800s, James Pollard Espy, a respected pioneer in the science of meteorology, proposed setting huge fires across the central United States to ensure rainfall for the nation’s crops. His assumption: superheating the air would force raindrops to condense. Espy failed to secure federal funding for this plan, but in 1891, Robert Dyrenforth was more successful. The U.S. Government invested nearly $20,000 in Dyrenforth’s experiments in “rainmaking by explosives.” Dyrenforth believed, as did the ancient Greeks and Romans, that the loud sounds of battle shook water loose from the sky. He traveled across Texas, detonating balloons full of hydrogen and rackarock, a coal mining explosive, expecting the resulting explosions to “squeeze the water out of the air like a sponge.” They did not.

The true stock-in-trade of the American rainmaker was not science but showmanship. A rainmaker rolling into town might not bring storms, but he was guaranteed to draw a crowd, much like a traveling magician or circus troupe. Rainmaker Frank Melbourne, also known as “The Rain Wizard,” was once described as “a kind of cornfield Barnum.” His Australian accent and self-aggrandizing stories were as vital to his success as his secret rainmaking formula, which he kept in a black bag he called “the baby.” Rainmaker Clayton Jewell plied his trade from a specially rigged boxcar lab with the help of a hunchbacked assistant. In the words of historian James Rodger Fleming, Jewell “rode the rails as a kind of traveling fireworks and vaudeville show, detonating dynamite, launching exploding balloons and rockets, and dispensing foul-smelling volatile gases charged with electricity.”

But America’s most famous rainmaker lived right here in San Diego. In late 1915, at the height of the Panama-California Exposition (the event for which Balboa Park was created), the San Diego City Council promised Charles Mallory Hatfield $10,000 if he could make enough rain to fill the Morena Reservoir. Hatfield, who preferred to be called a “moisture accelerator,” built a 12-foot wooden tower, climbed atop it and mixed his rainmaking chemicals — double the dose he would ordinarily have used. Within a week, the rains began. Within a month, the San Diego River had overflowed its banks, Mission Valley was flooded, two major dams had burst and whole communities had been destroyed. The event became known as “Hatfield’s Flood,” but the City Council declared it an Act of God, refusing to pay Hatfield a single penny.

Hatfield’s biographer, Garry Jenkins, called this age of American rainmaking “the era of technology, of practical miracles, of Progress.” As great inventors captured the American imagination — Thomas Edison, Henry Ford, Alexander Graham Bell — nothing could better encapsulate the spirit of the West than the rainmaker: a man determined to use his ingenuity to beat nature at her own game, or at least make a good old American dollar in the attempt.

Since then he directed more than 200 plays of all styles and periods and produced an additional 270 productions. His vision for The Old Globe resulted in the establishment of the Shakespeare Festival and the San Diego Junior Theatre in the late ‘40s, the expansion to two theatres in the ‘50s, Globe Educational Tours in the ‘70s and Teatro Meta and the Old Globe/University of San Diego M.F.A. program in the ‘80s. During the 1940s, Mr. Noel served as dialogue director for the 20th Century Fox Studios and was the former director of the Ernie Pyle Theatre in Tokyo. Described by Variety as the eminence grise of San Diego theatre, Mr. Noel is one of the few San Diegans to have had an entire year (1987) proclaimed in his honor, and to be named one of San Diego’s “Living Treasures.” He was a founder of the California Theatre Council and a former vice president of the California Confederation of the Arts. His numerous honors include The San Diego Union-Tribune list of 25 persons who shaped the city’s history; the Governor’s Award for the Arts; University of Arizona Alumni Association’s Outstanding Citizen, for his contribution to their Fine Arts department; San Diego State University’s Outstanding Alumnus; Conservator of American Arts Award from American Conservatory Theater; the San Diego Press Club Headliner Award; San Diego Gentleman of Distinction Award; and a combined tribute from the Public Arts Advisory Council and the San Diego County Board of Supervisors. In 2007, he received the National Medal of Arts – the nation’s highest honor for artistic excellence – in a ceremony at the White House. Craig Noel died on April 3, 2010 at the age of 94.

SUMMER PROGRAMS FOR STUDENTS

The Old Globe is filled with activity day and night during the summer months. Shows are performed in all three theatres, and each one is supported with audience engagement activities such as Insights Seminars, Post-Show Forums and Shakespeare in the Garden lectures. Audience members have a lot to choose from, and many do it all.

At the same time, even more is happening behind the scenes. In July and August, the Karen and Donald Cohn Education Center and Globe rehearsal halls are swarming with teenagers immersed in classes, workshops and rehearsals. They’re studying acting with some of the top theatre artists in the country – the very actors you see on our stages all summer.

The Old Globe’s MIDDLE SCHOOL CONSERVATORY introduces eager young actors to a variety of acting styles, equipping them to tackle everything from Shakespeare to contemporary playwrights. Students learn skills ranging from auditioning to stage combat and prepare scenes and monologues for a showcase performance on the last day of class. The Conservatory instructors are professional actors who love sharing their knowledge and skill with these talented young people. The program has become so popular that registration fills by early April each year with students ready to commit three weeks of their summer to building new skills and finding new friends at the Globe.

The SUMMER SHAKESPEARE INTENSIVE for high school students is a highlight of The Old Globe’s year. In March, hopeful teens line up to audition for one of only 35 spots in the program. Students who participate have the rare opportunity to be treated like professional actors as they rehearse one-hour versions of two Shakespeare plays. They prepare tirelessly with their directors and stage managers in a rehearsal process that mirrors that of any of our regular productions. They see all three shows in the Shakespeare Festival and then study with those very actors. And then, on one glorious evening, they perform on the Lowell Davies Festival Theatre stage before a packed house of family and friends. It is an experience they’ll remember for the rest of their lives.

Every department at the Globe is involved in this program, and it shows on the stage that night. The performance this year is on Monday, August 12 at 8:00 p.m. Join us for an evening you won’t soon forget. It’s just one more reason to enjoy your summer here at The Old Globe.

Not-for-profit organizations like The Old Globe are an integral part of our community and, as independent private entities, provide countless services and programs for children and adults of all ages. By definition, each or all of these organizations must depend upon the financial support, advocacy and volunteerism of their patrons to meet their goals and must also rely greatly on the leadership and governance of a dedicated Board of Directors.

You have likely seen the lists of members of the Globe’s Board of Directors many times but may not be aware that these individuals are generous donors and volunteers themselves, providing invaluable time and talent in service of the mission established by the Globe’s founders. The Globe’s Board currently consists of 46 members, representing a broad range of community leaders, educators, businesses and family affiliations. In addition to their own generous financial support, the Board provides countless hours of guidance over fiduciary matters, institutional policy, legal concerns, administrative management and long-range planning. These functions are carried out through regular meetings of the full Board and its committees. In addition, ad-hoc committees are formed as needed, such as the recent Artistic Director Search Committee.

Equally vital, Board members serve as advocates for the Theatre, enhancing the organization’s public image. One of the many reasons for the Globe’s 78 years of success and achievement comes from a spirit of collaboration set forth by Craig Noel, who greatly valued the volunteer leadership that helped lift the Globe higher and higher. The Globe’s Board continues this legacy, reaching out through personal advocacy efforts to neighbors, friends and community, forging new relationships and partnerships.

We are deeply grateful to the Globe’s Board of Directors for shepherding this great institution, the largest performing arts organization in San Diego and the sixth-largest regional theatre in the nation.

The Old Globe appreciates the City of San Diego’s recognition of how effectively arts and culture foster creativity and innovation and stimulate the local economy. Mayor Filner and the City Council are firmly committed to allocating 1% of Transient Occupancy Tax collected from tourists for reinvestment in the City’s not-for-profit arts and culture organizations, providing vital programming for both residents and visitors. At The Old Globe, this funding helps support a year-round production schedule of world-class theatre as well as education and community programs.

The Old Globe is pleased to welcome Denise Montgomery as the new Executive Director of the Commission for Arts and Culture, appointed to this critical post by Mayor Filner in May 2013 following a national search to replace former Executive Director Victoria Hamilton after 24 years of dedicated service. Under Ms. Montgomery’s leadership the Commission will continue its exemplary work while moving steadily toward the achievement of new goals and accomplishments.
In recognition of their unique contribution to the growth of The Old Globe and their special talent, we take great pride and pleasure in acknowledging as Associate Artists the following individuals who have repeatedly demonstrated by their active presence on our stages and in our shops, that wherever else they may work, they remain the heart and soul of the Globe.

RESTROOMS
Restrooms are located in the lower lobby of the Old Globe Theatre, the lobby of the Sheryl and Harvey White Theatre and adjacent to the Lowell Davies Festival Theatre.

SEATING OF LATECOMERS
Although we understand parking is often at a premium, the seating of latecomers is extremely disruptive. Latecomers may be given alternative seating and will be seated at an appropriate interval.

YOUNG CHILDREN
Children five years of age and under will not be admitted to performances.

ELECTRONIC DEVICES AND CAMERAS
The video and/or audio recording of this performance by any means whatsoever are strictly prohibited. Please silence all digital watches, pagers and cellular phones prior to entering the theatre.

ASSISTED LISTENING SYSTEM
For the convenience of our hard of hearing and hearing-impaired patrons, The Old Globe has an Assistive Listening System in all three theatres: the Sheryl and Harvey White Theatre, the Old Globe Theatre and the Lowell Davies Festival Theatre. A limited number of the lightweight headsets, as well as induction neck loops, may be obtained from the house manager prior to performances.

PUBLIC TOURS
